AN EXPLANATION.

The following letter has been handed to The Express for publication:

Mr. Editor:—Under the heading, "Volunteers left Friday" there appeared some severe criticisms in The Beaver of last week upon the band not turning out to see the boys off to the front. It is not my practice to pay any attention to adverse newspaper comments but on behalf of the other members of the band I, as leader feel that I am called upon to send you a brief reply. I fail to see why the band should be singled out for criticism. It was not generally known that the volunteers were going away when they did and I was not advised of the fact until a short time before the train was expected. The writer of that article forgot or did not know that the members of the band are engaged in various occupations which will not permit them to drop their work upon a few minutes notice and no less than six members live in the country. If the few who might have been able to respond to the call had attempted to do so the same critic would doubtless have passed just as severe comments upon the character of the music with half of the important instruments missing. There is no body of men in the town who give as much time to the public as the band. At great sacrifice to themselves they devote one evening each week to practise and during the summer months devote another to the weekly concerts in the park, and I do not think that in other respects they are lacking in either public spirit or loyalty.

Thanking you for the space allowed for this letter, I am,

Yours sincerely,

TEA EMBARGO REMOVED PRICE DROPS FIVE CENTS

Salada Tea Company Announces Re-tion—Will Buy Tea Back From Grocers.

The Salada Tea Company announced yesterday that they had reduced the prices of their teas five cent pound. The following is the announcement forwarded to the press by the company:

The embargo on tea has been completely removed in England, and hence temporary this may be, we have taken advantage of it to immediately reduce our prices five cents per pound.

This is in spite of the fact that the risk insurance and freights are so abnormally high, and that no shipments have yet been made from Ceylon or India.

All these conditions leave the situation, while relieved somewhat from last week, still in a very difficult condition, and it is impossible to see a week ahead.

We are undertaking to take back the tea we shipped last week from the grocer, and pay him for it exactly what he paid us. The cost this will be very large, but we know this is the only way in which the interests of both the consumer and the grocer can be safeguarded.

Oshawa, Aug. 25th, 1914

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NAPANEE EXPRESS.

Dear Sir:—You cannot imagine how anxious I was to get my paper for Napanee last week. I wanted to know how dear old Napanee, the place of my birth, the cradle of loyalty; the home of U. E. L. children of Canada gave their volunteer soldiers a send-off upon their departure for the front to fight the battles of the Empire. Imagine my feelings when I read that "no steps were taken to give them a send-off"! I read and re-read the paper, I looked a dozen times to see the paper really came from Napanee and thought the notice must have referred to some doing among the Pro-Bears of fifteen years ago, but finally I settled down to the sober facts that either there was a big tea in the bottom of the bag in Napanee loyalty or else her leading citizen must have been away bass fishing getting ready for the opening of the shooting season and had not yet heard of the war! In case you may not have heard what other towns are doing I send you a copy of an Oshawa paper which will let you see how they feel in a town where as yet I have not heard of anyone who boasted of the U. E. L. connections, I am sore disappointed with my old town on this matter, and for the present I feel like regarding it as a sort of oversight which I trust will yet be partly made right by having the council send the boys at least $5.00 a piece, before they leave Valcartier.

GOVERNMENT TO PUNISH EXTORTION BY DEALERS

Premier Gives Warning That Government Has Power to Deal Promptly With any Case of Unjustifiable Increase in Price of Food or Other Necessaries.

Ottawa, Aug. 24.—The following official statement was given out by the prime minister this afternoon, as representing the views of the Government:

"While the action of the majority of dealers thruout the country during the present crisis has been characterized by a sense of fairness and justice, nevertheless several complaints have reached the Government that arbitrary and burdensome increases in the cost of certain necessities of life have been made in some localities without any sufficient or substantial cause or reason.

"Under these circumstances it is desirable to have it generally known and understood that under the wide powers which have been conferred upon it by parliament, the government has the right to investigate and to deal promptly with any case or cases of unjustifiable increase or any oppressive combination or tendency on the part of the dealers.

"Under the grave conditions which confront us by reason of the outbreak of war, any course which would be oppressive or unfair toward the laboring and artisan classes and generally those possessed of small incomes, is most strongly to be condemned, and will demand the exercise by the Government of all the powers at its command."

TO THE EDITOR.

Dear Sir:—Much has been stated concerning an eternally burning hell. I wish to thank you for some erroneous ideas regarding important subject.

First of all the God of love not consign His creatures to flames of an eternally burning Satan is responsible for such a dishonoring doctrine. The wicked be utterly consumed and destroyed the lake of fire.

The most horrible doctrine conceived in the mind of mar demon is that of eternal torment.

It denies that God is a God of by teaching the continued torture the impenitent. It causes unhappiness and scoffing to call our Father the author of such a plan.

It involves his whole administration in the deepest dishonor. It spoils the joys of heaven to hear piteous wails forever pleading for drop of water to cool their parched tongues. Is there a person with spark of human kindness in his heart who could endure the sight of "wages of sin is death" not eternal life in torment.

They will be burned up, destroyed, reduced to ashes and smoke, to everlasting destruction, to be as they had not been. So speaks Scripture of the final destiny wicked men and demons. They be burned with unquenchable fire. This refers to intensity and not duration. It is unquenchable because cannot be put out or quenched long as there is anything to burn.

The wicked will always remain in Therefore the punishment which eternal complete destruction will be everlasting. The destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah is set forth as an ample of eternal fire. Seek out the site of those ardent cities and saline waters of the Dead Sea over the spot where they once stood. The fire was eternal because the destruction was eternal. The terms "forever" "eternal" and "everlasting" according to all standard authorities, mean unlimited duration only when used in connection with things which never cease to be, but limited duration when used with things which will not always continue to exist.

No provision is made for eternal blasphemy against God's holy name. Malachi foretells us the wicked will be burned up, root and branch, they will become ashes under the soles of the saints feet. The stain of sin will be wiped away. The universe will be clean. Divine justice will meet. The agonies of the lake of fire will not end in the blackness of eternal night.

Eternal life and eternal death set before you. Now is the time to decide your eternal destiny. Rebellion shall not rise up the second time. Righteousness shall win the eternal victory when all rebellion, curs and hatred shall have gone out, tiredly and forever.

PATRIOTISM IN BUYING.

In so far as we can manufacture and purchase in Canada and the Mother Country we will provide employment for Canadian and British workmen, assist Canadian transportation companies, and increase the general volume of business. In such a policy there would be no hostility to other countries. We would be adopting only a legitimate war measure and making the welfare of our people the first concern. It is not suggested that there should be any legislative compulsion. The policy could be made effective only through the patriotism of the Canadian people. But we could do no more patriotic service than to increase employment and stimulate business by buying only within Canada and the Empire until the war terminates. Systematic agitation and organization to show the advantages of the proposal would be warranted.

NOT A HOSPITAL SHIP.

Toronto Daily News—The Admiralty has asked the Central Committee of the Women's Hospital Ship Fund through H.R.H., the Duchess of Connaught to allow the Imperial gift of money for an hospital ship to be used for a supplementary naval hospital at Portsmouth. This is in accordance with the original resolution under which the fund was raised. In response to a further request from the Admiralty that a name be chosen for this hospital, the Central Committee decided to ask that this be "The Canadian Women's Hospital." This fund will close on Sept. 1st.

WOMAN AND WAR.

Mail and Empire—Throughout the ages women have at least equalled men in patriotism. Yesterday they commandeered money for a merciful object, but they have rendered and can render even greater services for their country. Where has one heard of women witholding their dear ones from the defence line? How many times in history have British mothers, daughters, wives and sweet-hearts bravely cheered their kinsmen on the way to battle, and done their weeping in secret afterwards?

Sir Isaac Brock's fiancée handed him a stirrup cup before he rode away up the Niagara River to a glorious death at Queenston Heights. Laura Secord carried the message through the forest to Beaver Dams. Florence Nightingale braved the snows of a Crimean winter that thereafter sick and wounded soldiers might be nursed by feminine hands. Many Canadian nurses have volunteered for service during the present war, and many others of our women must sit at home and wait in anxiety for news of sons, brothers and husbands at the front.

ITALY UNDER PRESSURE.

She Will Probably Take Up Arms Against Triple Alliance.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—There is good reason for believing Italy soon will be involved in the great conflagration, and that she will come in, not on the side of Germany and Austria, with whom she constitutes the triple alliance, but with the allies.

While it is impossible to obtain definite information, it is known tremendous pressure is being brought to bear upon Italy by both sides. The allies are confident the representations of Germany and Austria will be, if they have not already proved, definitely to be ineffective.

The British press teems with leaders pointing out the advantages accru-ing to Italy if she joins the allies, even to the extent of discussing the spoils of war which might fall to Italy in the way of provinces recovered and additional territory secured from Austria. There are persistent rumors in diplomatic circles here that the Italian Government already has decided upon the fateful step. While the allies do not doubt their ability to take care of Germany and Austria without any more help, it is well recognized that Italy's assistance would make the victory more sure and certainly much quicker.

German Pressure Fails.

ROME, Aug. 25.—The German Ambassador here has been actively trying to induce the Italian press to advocate Italy's intervention in behalf of Germany. The inducement which he has been holding out is Italy's coming into possession of Tunisia and Algeria.

So far the Ambassador's efforts have failed completely. Not a single newspaper, not even those which were Austrophile before the war, has published a solitary article in favor of the German views.

NAMUR IS CAPTURED.

British Official Bureau Announces Fall of Stronghold.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — The London Times in its news summary this morning says: "Namur has fallen. This is, in the words of the official communication, and necessitates the withdrawal of a portion of the allied troops from the line of Sambre to their original defensive position on the French frontier."

"The official Press Bureau also announced yesterday that the British forces were engaged all day on Sunday and after dark with the enemy in the neighborhood of Mons, and held their ground."

"Namur is a strongly fortified city at the junction of the Meuse and Sambre. It was confidently expected to present a formidable obstacle to the German advance. There is as yet no explanation of its sudden fall. No doubt the Germans have attacked the allies in this part of Belgium with all their available forces."

"The French Minister of War, in an official statement, reminded the nation that the huge extent of the front along which the armies are engaged, and the enormous number of troops upon that front, make it impossible to estimate the importance of momentary developments."

"The battle now raging from Mons to Cirey will last several days, and it will be necessary to await a definite result before a sound conclusion can be reached as to the full effect of this first great engagement."

ALLIES BEFORE TSINGTAU.

Japan, Britain and Russia Blockade German Port.

PEKIN, Aug. 25. — The blockade of Tsingtau, the fortified seaport of Kiao Chau, has begun.

British, French and Russian vessels of war are taking part in the movement.

Up to the present time only British regiments have received orders to co-operate with the Japanese in the operations against Kiao Chau on the land side. The French, however, are expecting orders to assist the British. There probably will not be more than two or three regiments from each nation.

"Every Frenchman will deplore the temporary abandonment of positions of Alsace and Lorraine, while we had occupied and certain part of the national territory will suffer from events of which they will be the theatre."

"The ordeal is inevitable, but temporary. Thus detachments of German cavalry belonging to an unattached division operating on the extreme right have penetrated to Rouboix, six miles north of Lille, in the Tourcoing district, which are defended only by territorial reservists."

"Our valiant people will know how to find courage to support this trial with unflinching faith in final success which is not to be doubted. In telling to the country the whole truth the Government and military authorities give it the strongest proof of their absolute confidence in victory which depends only on our perseverance and tenacity."

The military situation was discussed at a special meeting of the Cabinet at Elysee Palace last night, presided over by President Poincare. The deliberations lasted three hours.

First Namur Defences Taken.

LONDON, Aug. 25. — It was officially stated by the war press bureau yesterday afternoon that the British troops were defeated in the great battle which has been raging for three days in Belgium along a front of 10 miles, extending from Mons to the Luxemburg border. The British forces fought till it was too dark to see Sunday near Mons, holding their ground. The first line of defence at Namur was taken, causing the retirement of a portion of the British force from the line of operations on the Sambre.

In addition, the German troops, on an offset to the attack of the allied armies at Mons, invaded French territory in great numbers, capturing Luneville, where 150 guns were seized; Amance and Dieulouard.

An unconfirmed report from Paris says that Nancy, the capital of the Department of Meurthe-et-Moselle, city of 103,000 inhabitants, has fallen into the hands of the Germans. At all events, it was known earlier than an attack was being made on the city. Otherwise the French front had not been modified.

It is apparent that the Kaiser has hurled his entire army of 2,000,000 men, active and reserve, against the French and British, in an effort to break through the lines of the allied armies and force an entrance farther into France in his haste to get his army actively engaged in French territory before the arrival of the Russian hosts.

Small Towns Club Together.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25. — The Militia Department announces that a number of small western Ontario towns, who do not feel able to render assistance in a substantial manner individually are clubbing together to lend aid to the Dominion. On Sir Adam Beck's suggestion several gifts of horses are being made and already there has been a generous response to the idea a fact welcomed at headquarters.

A deputy in the Italian Parliament lost his shirt in a sleeping compartment while on a railway journey. He wrote an indignant letter to the directors of the line, in which he said: "It is shameful that the railway servants, for whom so much has been done by members of Parliament should dare to appropriate the belongings of passengers. A few days after this protest he received a letter signed by 200 railway employees in which was inclosed a postal order for $1, which, the letter said, was the result of a small collection in which the railway men hoped would enable him to buy another shirt."

RUSSIANS ADVANCING

Army Crossing East Prussia With 70-Mile Front.

Germans Are Retiring Wasting the Country as They Go—Decisive Battle Is Likely Within a Few Days—Russia Now Holds All the Important Railway Junction Points in the District.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 25.—The victorious Russian army is now advancing through east Prussia along a front more than seventy miles in extent. Taking Napoleon's famous battle fields of Eylau and Friedland, 25 miles southeast of Koenigsburg, as the centre, the actual position of the Russian forces is indicated with sufficient exactness.

The Germans are retiring along the entire front, burning and wasting their own country as they go.

Those in a position to know predict that the decisive battle on Germany's eastern front will develop in the next three or four days, and that if it does not actually precede the determination of the great conflict on the French frontier the two struggles will so nearly coincide as to make it impracticable for Germany to detach reinforcements to help block the advance of the Russians.

An official bulletin issued at a late hour last night announcing occupation by Russian force of a number of points in German territory confirms the forecast of the Russian plan of campaign. The Russians have put themselves in possession of the important railway junctions running into the interior of Germany and connecting with Russia.

Russia's two armies are now one army advancing along an unbroken front of more than seventy miles.

RIGID TESTS BEGIN.

Men at Valcartier Undergo Another Examination.

VALCARTIER, Que., Aug. 25.—Lt.-Col. A. T. Shillington, of Ottawa, senior medical recruiting officer, assisted by a staff of about twenty physicians from several eastern cities, will decide the fate of many of the militiamen encamped here to-day. Early in the morning the weeding out process was begun, and it will probably take more than a week medically to examine all the volunteers. Ten tents have been erected for the purpose. Despite the fact that a stiff examination of all recruits took place before they were enlisted, the inspection here will be more severe, and there is a possibility of many being struck off the rolls. The men found to be unfit for service will be sent to their respective homes immediately.

There are nearly 15,000 men in camp to-day, the arrivals yesterday having been much lighter than anticipated. Only three regiments reached the camp, the 53rd, 54th and 84th, all from the eastern townships.

CHARLEROI HOLDS OUT.

Germans Fail To Take City From French Defenders.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—"Since yesterday morning the Germans have been attacking Charleroi, which the French are holding," says The Daily Mail's Ostend correspondent, telegraphing Monday. "The Germans invaded the town from the Montagny side and came out by the turning bridges in front of the railway station."

A few days later this protest he received a letter signed by 200 railway employees, which was inclosed a postal order for $1, which, the letter said, was a result of a small collection and which the railway men hoped would enable him to buy another shirt."

ST. CHARLES TRIUMPHS OUT.

Germans Fail To Take City From French Defenders.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—"Since yesterday morning the Germans have been attacking Charleroi, which the French are holding," says The Daily Mail's Ostend correspondent, telegraphing Monday. "The Germans invaded the town from the Montigny side and came out by the turning bridges in front of the railway station."

"There was a hot fight for the possession of the bridges as well as for the railway station and other buildings."

"German shells are falling in the town. The houses on the left of the Hotel Europe, as seen from the railway station, appeared to be seriously damaged. A mass of French artillery and troops in long lines poured out, it is said, toward Charleroi, and the Germans were driven back with a serious loss."

EMPEROR IS WORSE.

Franz Joseph's Death Is Now Expected at Any Moment.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—A dispatch from Copenhagen to the Exchange Telegram Co. says that the condition of Emperor or Francis Joseph of Austria is much worse and that his death is now only a question of hours.

Rumors that the Emperor of Austria was critically ill have been circulated during the past 24 hours, but lack official confirmation.

Fired at Laurier's Car.

OTTAWA, Aug. 25.—What is thought to have been a bullet from a revolver or rifle, pierced the glass windshield of Sir Wilfrid Laurier's limousine on O'Connor street. No one was in the car at the time but the chauffeur, Aldege Giroux, who was on his way for Lady Laurier, who had been making a call. Giroux says he heard a whizzing sound close to his head and then a click as the shield was pierced. He stopped the car, but could see no one. The hole in the glass shield is cut clean, just as if done by a bullet.

More Expected From Dominions.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The English papers are warning the people that the war is only beginning, and that they must be prepared for a long struggle, which will tax the resources and manhood of the nation to the utmost limit. While appreciating all that the colonies have done, they expect colonies with the population of Canada and Australia to contribute much more in men and money to the Empire than they have yet done.

French Mint Coining Silver.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—It is reported that the French mint is rushing the coining of silver, and has issued about 4,500,000 frs. in the last ten days. It is expected 15,000,000 frs. in silver will be coined on this movement.

Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

"Under these circumstances it is essential to have it generally known and understood that under the wide powers which have been conferred upon it by Parliament, the Government has the right to investigate and to deal promptly with any case or cases of unjustifiable increase or any oppressive combination or tendency on the part of dealers."

"Under the grave conditions which confront us by reason of the outbreak of war, any course which would be oppressive or unfair toward the laboring and artisan classes and generally those possessed of small incomes, is most strongly to be condemned, and will demand the exercise of the Government of all the powers at its command."

BIG VICTORY CLAIMED.

Germans Send Out Glowing Report Of Battle.

BERLIN, Aug. 25.—(By wireless telegraph from Nauen, Germany, to Sayville, Long Island.)—Official announcement was made here yesterday that the German army commanded by Grand Duke Albrecht of Wuertemberg has defeated a French army at Neufchateau.

It captured many guns, flags and prisoners, including several generals.

German armies under Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, Crown Prince Frederick Wilhelm and Grand Duke Albrecht are vigorously pursuing the French.

The army under Rupprecht captured on hundred and fifty guns at Luneville, Blamont and Cirey, in the French Departments of Meurthe and Moselle.

The army commanded by the Crown Prince pursued the French beyond Longwy.

The Germans are west of the River Meuse, and advancing against Maubeuge. They have defeated a British brigade of cavalry.

Another Version.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The German Embassy yesterday received the following message from the Foreign Office in Berlin:—

"The army of the German Crown Prince has won a decisive victory northwest of Biezenhosen over five French army corps. The retreat of the southern French wing on Verdun has been cut off. The French troops were repulsed across the River Meuse in complete rout. The Crown Prince's army, giving chase, took many prisoners, and it is declared the French troops are no longer able to face the terrific fire of the German infantry."

Belgium Alleges Atrocities.

LONDON, Aug. 25.—The Belgian Legation issued a note last night protesting against threats of reprisals on the part of Germany and giving special details which, it says, have been verified by the Department of Justice.

Among the alleged acts committed by German soldiers was the burning of the village of Linsmeau on the night of Aug. 10 and the beating with the butts of guns of eleven men, all of whom died. The pretext given was that civilians had killed a German officer, but investigation by the military authorities, according to the statement established that this man had been killed in battle by Belgian soldiers.

Germans Issue Drastic Order.

Crown Prince Dead?

LONDON, Aug. 25.—Refugees coming from Germany state, according to The Evening Standard, that reports persist that Crown Prince Frederick William is dead.

This is the latest of a series of reports representing that the heir to the throne had been stabbed by a Socialist, had been wounded in battle and other stories of a similar character.

Babylon.

We are pretty much in the dark in regard to the ancient city of Babylon. Even no estimate is given of the number of inhabitants in Babylon at any one time. Sennacherib sacked and demolished the city 690 B. C. and made the very site unrecognizable. The city was rebuilt by Esarhaddon. Just when it again disappeared is not made clear in history, but it never attained its former eminence. Nothing definite is known of its actual size.

WHY SOLDIER STANDS ERECT

Not to Look Attractive But to Produce Perfect Health.

Standing straight like thinking straight is necessary for perfect health.

The majority of people have an idea that the soldier is trained to walk straight—head up, shoulders back—in order to look attractive and to have a distinctive carriage of his body.

Soldiers are drilled and trained to walk as they do in order to keep the human machinery in proper working condition and not for appearances. If they could do better work—that is be kept in better health—by any other attitude, it would be taught them.

The military man is trained to walk so as to give every organ inside the body plenty of room to do its work—to keep vital vessels from bending or telescoping.

As the body grows in height the blood vessels and the organs they supply grow to correspond with the height of the body.

For example: A youth grows up to be a man six feet tall. If the development has been natural every blood vessel, nerve and intestinal organ has grown to fit and work at this height of the body. They are adjusted to do their best work at this particular development of this individual whether he or she be short or tall.

Now, if through carelessness or lack of understanding of this important matter, the individual walks with a slouch or stoops while standing, he is bending or telescoping several if not all the vessels which supply his body and tissues with nourishment, repair material, blood or oxygen.

The same injurious conditions are brought about when a growing girl bends over while reading, writing or at work. The latest fad in woman's walk—the slouch—is certain to compress the internal organs, bring about local inflammation or obstruction, and, of course, in time injure the health.

If you go about with a drooping head, if you let your neck muscles become so weak that you cannot hold up your head, you are in danger of ill-health slowly stealing upon you.

Do you know why so many sedentary persons have indigestion, torpid liver, poor complexion? Because they go about or sit around with the internal organs telescoped or doubled upon each other. This causes interference with the free flow of blood, presses upon some opening in the liver or closes a duct.

In fact, just picture for yourself an intricate machine of muscles, tissues,

THE LAND OF OPHIR.

Territory Now Derelict Where Solomon Got His Gold.

The coast of southeastern Africa is not usually regarded to-day as a region of any especial interest. It mainly belongs to the vast undeveloped territory of Portuguese East Africa. The interior is wild and thinly inhabited, nor, apart from their political position and their rather trifling commercial importance, are the towns—Sofala, Mozambique, and their fellows—especially inviting places.

Nevertheless, there is much that is of great, perhaps supreme interest in this more or less derelict territory. It is certain that it has been in the past of great commercial importance. This is by no means an unparalleled phenomenon in history. The decayed town of Novgorod, in Russia, was once the emporium of northeast Europe; the awful desert of Mekran in Beluchistan has been a great trade highway.

There is ample evidence that the region behind Sofala, part of which is now known as Mashonaland, was anciently of vast importance owing to its gold mines. It contains a remarkable series of ruins, mostly, as is plain from the evidence afforded by them, those of gold mining centers. One of these deserted settlements is tolerably well known under the name of "Zimbabwe," but it is only one of many.

Concerning the people who built these settlements and exploited the mineral resources of this still auriferous region there has been much controversy. So much seems certain that they were not an artistic race. This at once rules out the Egyptians. The almost entire lack of artistic objects and their very poor character might seem to point to Phoenicians, but since the Cretan discovers the Phoenicians are being relegated to a lower place in history than they have hitherto occupied, and purely Phoenician enterprise in southeast Africa is highly improbable.

The indications rather point to Arabia. The commercial importance of Arabia before the Mahomedan era is certain. The Sabaeans of Yemen might very well have explored the eastern coast of Africa. The distance from Aden to Delagoa Bay is some 2,600 miles less than that from Tyre to the Scillies, and there is really no solid reason against the probability of the accomplishment of such a voyage by Arab seamen; it was merely a matter of lengthy coasting. The gold fields would furnish an irresistible argument for systematic settlement.

BIRTH OF A RIVER.

How the St. Lawrence, the Oldest in the World, Was Formed.

ITS BED WAS MADE TO ORDER.

Nature Saved This Historic and Unchanging Stream the Trouble of Cutting a Channel For its Course From the Great Lakes to the Sea.

What is the oldest river in the world? The St. Lawrence. It is also one of the few rivers that did not have to make its own bed and has remained unchanged since the very beginning of the American continent.

Try to think of a time when the earth was covered by a mass of water, hot, steaming and often tremendously disturbed by the throes of a globe beneath it that was shrinking because it was becoming cooler. As the globe shrank every particle of the outside was naturally pulled in toward the center, and the hardening crust, which could not be packed any more solidly than it was, had to wrinkle, sinking down here and bulging up somewhere else.

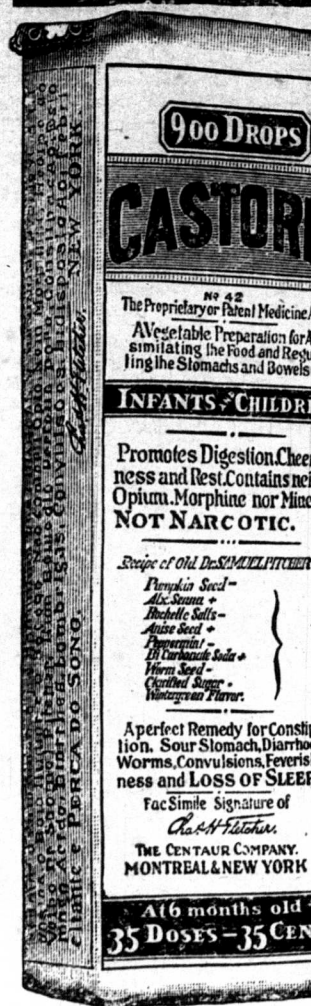

After a time certain of these rising wrinkles, or folds, the thicker or firmer parts of the earth's crust, stood the strain and became permanent ridges. The oldest of them that geologists know and apparently the first that bulged up above the universal ocean and remained high and dry was the broad mass on which Canada now rests. It is a part of the original crust of the earth, and we can see it today wherever it is not covered by newer rocks or soil just as it crystallized and cooled out of the primeval molten material.

This mass formed a broad V from Labrador down to Lake Huron and thence northward to Alaska. On account of its shape geologists call it the Canadian shield. It is the oldest land known and apparently the strongest, for there are no signs of any extensive changes in it (except the wearing away of the surface) since it first rolled the ocean off its shoulders.

Off the eastern coast of this primitive continent lay a chain of lofty islands about on the line of the Blue Ridge, the White mountains, the Maine coast and Nova Scotia. Between these islands and the mainland was a trough-like space that ran from eastern Quebec southwestward to Ohio. It was two or three hundred miles wide and filled with a shallow sea, and just outside the island chain was the great hollow that held the Atlantic ocean.

Time went on. For ages the straining and cracking of the shrieking globe, earthquakes, sun and frost, pounding surf, running water, blowing gales, ice—all labored to tear down the mountains and carry the wreckage of rocks and dust away into the valleys and seas. In this way vast masses of rock in layers of shales, sandstones, and what not, were laid down in that narrow, troughlike sea between the chain of islands and the continent.

All these "sedimentary" rocks were soft and weak as compared with the solid old granites deeply rooted on either side of them, and the trough itself, a sagging fold, was a line of weakness in the crust. As the load of

BIRD DIVORCES.

Feathered World Has Social Institutions All Its Own.

Generally speaking, the social life of birds is of the happiest description. Their courtship and marriage is one long love song, and it often happens, as one famous naturalist has put it, that while some young human couple are pouring out their hearts to each other beneath the leaves of an apple tree some feathered Romeo is making ardent love to his coy, coquettish Juliet in the branches above.

That clever student of bird life, Mrs. Olive Thorn Miller, maintains that birds have a distinct social life of their own, which is full of interest to the careful observer. The most important feature of their life is that bird marriages are permanent, implying constancy in their affection of which proof may be found everywhere.

Parrots are notably devoted birds and are willing to make great sacrifices for their mates. She instances a case where one of a caged pair has managed to make her escape in the open air. The owner of the birds, having observed the attachment between them, hung the cage with the deserted one in it, at the open window. His calls reached the runaway mate and soon persuaded her to forsake the attractions of the summer woods and return to share you go about with a drooping head, if you let your neck muscles become so weak that you cannot hold up your head, you are in danger of ill-health slowly stealing upon you.

Do you know why so many sedentary persons have indigestion, torpid liver, poor complexion? Because they go about or sit around with the internal organs telescoped or doubled upon each other. This causes interference with the free flow of blood, presses upon some opening in the liver or closes a duct.

In fact, just picture for yourself an intricate machine of muscles, tissues, glands, vessels and their various ducts, tiny channels and valves, all in their places, each doing their allotted work without trouble and effort, confined in a framework built to hold them, and all this wonderful mechanism gradually interfered with by the bending or buckling of this frame and its covering.

If you were looking at such a machine made by man, you would see at once the necessity of keeping the frame upright and uninjured.

So must you keep the human frame if you would enjoy good health and long life.

Ancient Enamels.

It is certain that glazes having the composition of good enamels were manufactured at a very early date. Excellent glazes are still preserved, and some of the bricks which have been found among the ruins of Babylon have been ascribed to the seventh or eighth century B.C. The glaze on the Babylonian bricks was found upon examination to have a base of soda glass or silicate of sodium. Glazes of a similar character were also manufactured by the Egyptians as early as the sixth dynasty. There can be little doubt that the Greeks and Etruscans were also acquainted with the art of enameling.

Willing to Advise Him.

Excited Individual—See here, Mr. Bangs, you are a scoundrel of the first water. When I bought that horse I supposed I was getting a good sound animal, but he's spavined and blind and got the heaves. Now, I want to know what you're going to do about it?

Bangs—Something ought to be done, that's a fact.

Excited Individual—Well, I should say there had.

Bangs—Well, to-morrow I'll give you the name of a good veterinary surgeon. It's a shame to have that horse suffer in that way.

With an Eye Toward Economy.

Mr. Perry had been out for a day's fishing. As he proudly displayed the contents of his basket to his wife she exclaimed:

"Oh, Alva, aren't they beauties! But I've been so anxious for the past hour, dear."

"Foolish little one!" said Alva caressingly. "Why, what could have happened to me?"

"Oh, I didn't worry about you, dear," said the woman, "but it grew so late I was afraid that before you got back to town the fish markets would all be closed."

The indications rather point to Arabia. The commercial importance of Arabia before the Mahomedan era is certain. The Sabaeans of Yemen might very well have explored the eastern coast of Africa. The distance from Aden to Delagoa Bay is some 2,600 miles less than that from Tyre to the Scillies, and there is really no solid reason against the probability of the accomplishment of such a voyage by Arab seamen; it was merely a matter of lengthy coasting. The gold fields would furnish an irresistible argument for systematic settlement.

It is indeed possible that the country is the land of Ophir wherefrom Solomon obtained his gold. We know that the treasure ships sailed from Eziongebir on the Red Sea; we know also that Solomon had relations with the Sabaeans. The voyage was a long one; the ships are said to have come once in three years. This obviously points to a distant country, not to one comparatively near at hand, such as Somaliland.

The geographers of the Roman Empire were perfectly aware of the commercial importance of southeast Africa. Ptolemy names several towns. One he places, of course vaguely, at 16 degrees 25 minutes south, and calls it Prasium. The situation corresponds approximately with that of Killimane at the mouth of the Zambesi. Other trading stations are known. Gold, however, is not mentioned. There is reason to believe that the settlements were then deserted. All show unmistakable traces of having been destroyed by fire, and presumably some eruption of savagery from the interior overthrew them. They were rediscovered about A. D. 1000 by the people of Mogadodo, and again became immensely important, but if they did indeed furnish Solomon with his treasure their older glory will probably always outshine that of later days.

Grass.

Scientists long have believed that the "grass" which was eaten by Nebuchadnezzar to cure the malady that for several years threatened or obscured his reason was what modern epicures esteem under the name of asparagus. Asparagus is appetizing as well as otherwise suited to the alimentary requirements of man. There is a belief that the grains upon which man leans as the staff of life originally were developed from grasses. Interesting speculation is indulged in as to whether, if meat should become unavailable, man could extract nourishment from the sources that suffice for the herbivorous creatures which find in grass their favorite diet.

Wigs.

A passage in Polybius has been cited to prove that Hannibal wore a wig. Wigs were probably invented about the time of the first Roman emperors, for we are told that Otho had a scalp of fine feather with locks of hair upon it so well arranged as to seem natural.

Sadly Mixed.

"These potatoes taste strongly of gasoline, my dear. What recipe did you use?"

"I must have got my recipes mixed," answered the young wife after some reflection, "and used the one for cleaning velvet."—Exchange.

How She Knew.

"M-my dear," said the muddled citizen, "I 'sure you I wouldn't been s'lute, but footpad stopped me."

"And you were so scared your tongue clove to the roof of your mouth."

"How'd you know that?"

"I smell the clove."—Chicago News.

pouring sur, running water, blowing gales, ice—all labored to tear down the mountains and carry the wreckage of rocks and dust away into the valleys and seas. In this way vast masses of rock in layers of shales, sandstones, and what not, were laid down in that narrow, troughlike sea between the chain of islands and the continent.

All these "sedimentary" rocks were soft and weak as compared with the solid old granites deeply rooted on either side of them, and the trough itself, a sagging fold, was a line of weakness in the crust. As the load of deposits became heavier and heavier the floor of this trough slowly yielded, and as it sank toward the heated region below the underside melted and grew thinner and thinner.

That could not go on forever, and soon the continual shrinking of the globe and the enormous pressure of the weight of the ocean became irresistible. The Canadian shield was immovable, so the rock in the trough began to bulge or crumple all along its length. Gradually, not all at once, but by slow and varying movements, those folds were squeezed up, which in their broken and worn down form we know as the Appalachian mountains.

Toward the south there was room for this action to be rather gentle and regular, but in the far northeast the trough was narrow, and the soft rocks were set on edge, overturned and splintered against the solid continent.

Very early in the struggle a great fracture of the earth's crust occurred here along a curving northeast and southwest line. It left a deep and broad trench between the crushed and displaced rocks of the trough and the granite shore of the Canadian shield. Into this trench rushed all the interior waters of the continent, draining away to the sea, and the St. Lawrence river was born! There, no doubt, it will remain as long as the earth keeps its present form.

At that time there was no gulf of St. Lawrence. The land extended out to a coast line that stretched unbroken from Nova Scotia to Labrador. The present gulf is the result of a sinking of the coast region. Most of it is very shallow, but a chart of soundings shows the ancient river bed as a channel winding out between Newfoundland and Cape Breton to the deep ocean.—Youth's Companion.

Mme. de Stael.

Bonaparte said France was not large enough for himself and Mme. de Stael at the same time and exiled her. Next to Bonaparte she was, through her salons, the most powerful personage in the country in her time. "If I were empress of the world," exclaimed the brilliant Mme. de Tesse, "I would command Mme. de Stael to talk to me forever."

Both Disappointed.

Wife—If I'd known that you were after my money I would never have listened to you.

Husband—And if I'd known you'd be so mighty close with your money I would never have proposed.

She Hit Back.

"I told teacher, pop, that you said she taught you when you was a little boy."

"What did she say?"

"That stupidity must run in the family."

Plenty of Orders.

"My friend Wombat says he can't catch up with his orders."

"Is he a manufacturer?"

"Oh, no. Merely a man with a wife and five grownup daughters."

The owner of birds, having observed the attention between them, hung the cage with the deserted one in it, at open window. His calls reached runaway mate and soon persuaded her to forsake the attractions of summer woods and return to his prison.

Grief at the death of their mate is nearly always shown by birds. Some species mourn for what might seem an incredible length of time. They frequently return to the haunts, flying about and calling if they hoped to be able to find lost one again. Another instance of the affection between them is attention almost invariably shown the male to the female while the latter is hatching the young brood. brings her food, sings to her, often shares the task of sitting the eggs, thereby giving her an opportunity for rest.

"I am sorry to say, however says Mrs. Miller, "that in spite of this usually happy state of domestic affairs, there are occasionally mistakable instances of bird divorce. Sometimes it is the husband who tires of his spouse and drives away to make room for a new bride. Again it is the wife, perhaps, makes up her mind that father of the family is not providing properly for its wants, and rejects him on that score. In one case the kind which I watched I am sure this was the trouble. The husband was a cripple, from an injury to leg, and was certainly rather helpless. But he opposed vehemently efforts to drive him away, and succeeded in maintaining his authority until he was again able to care his household.

EVER SEE A PINK MONKEY?

This South American Brand Is Worth More Than the Other Kind.

If you should ever happen to be wandering about the Choco section of Colombia it would be well to have eye out for the sobbing monkey. This animal gets on your trail by night as well ring down the curtains and put a period after yourself.

When it gets after the Colombian Indians, according to H. G. Spurrell, naturalist and member of the London School of Tropical Medicine, the Indian listens to the beast's soul wither and then commits suicide.

Mr. Spurrell says that the sobbing monkey is pink and is one of the rare animals in South America. It reasons that have never been made clear the sobbing monkey will at certain times in the year leave its home in the most impenetrable wilderness and go to the nearest Indian encampment, where it will select its victim and follow him day and night, keeping up a continual weeping and wailing.

According to tribal traditions this is a sure sign that the victim will shortly be taken with the sleeping sickness, some other fatal disease. It has been customary for the natives to listen to the monkey's sobbing for three days and three nights and then commit suicide, thus avoiding death by the dread sickness.—New York Mail.

TURKEY'S G.O.M. GONE

SAID PASHA LAST GREAT LINK WITH OLD REGIME.

Veteran Politician Was a Remarkable Man In Many Ways, and Although the Inferior of Kiamil Pasha He Stood Out In the Limelight In Dramatic Situations—

Recalled Several Times.

Said Pasha, one of the most remarkable politicians that Turkey ever produced, has passed away, and the last notable link that bound the new regime to the old has been broken. Said Pasha's name is known to the world for two very good reasons, the more important being that it is easily spelt and confidently mispronounced. Perhaps he was not so great a man as Kiamil Pasha, who died not long ago, and who was his associate, as well as his master in Oriental diplomacy, but it was his fortune to be the man of the hour in two or three of the most dramatic situations in the modern history of Turkey. Originally called to high office in order that he might frustrate the plans of the patriots who desired to give Turkey some sort of decent government, he left the service of the Sultan, whose cruelty and viciousness disgusted him. Recalled again by the Young Turks, he seemed to betray them when preparing the constitution. Yet again when they were in straits they called him back, and upon him and Kiamil Pasha they relied for guidance in those days of stress and trial that led to the war with Italy.

Said Pasha was born in Armenia, and when a young man entered the service of the Turkish Government. Though he held several posts prior to his sudden elevation to be First Secretary to Hamid, they were of an unimportant character. How the new Sultan heard of Said Pasha is not clear, but he must have been pretty well informed when at a critical moment he called him to his side in 1876. At that time it appeared that Turkey was about to experience a renaissance of liberty and material prosperity. Midhat Pasha, who is the real father of the Young Turk movement, was the most powerful influence in Turkey under the Sultan, whose Ministers were ready to join him in a demand for a liberal constitution. Abdul Aziz was ready to sign it when a series of tragic events threw back the cause for thirty years. The Sultan committed suicide, and a Turkish officer ran amok in Midhat's home, where were gathered several of the Ministers to discuss the situation. He killed two of them, and for a few months confusion reigned in Constantinople.

The heir-apparent was Murad, but he showed signs of mental weakness, and Abdul Hamid began actively conspiring to occupy the throne. The Ministers, led by Midhat Pasha, believed that in this young prince lay the hope of Turkey. They approached him, and found that he was profuse in professions of devotion to the cause of liberty and in promises of reform if he became Sultan. In proof of his earnestness he signed a document in which among other things he agreed that Sadullah Bey, a noted reformer, should be his First Secretary. Soon afterward Murad was confined in a castle, and Abdul Hamid became Sultan. One of the first acts was to repudiate the promise to appoint a reformer as his First Secretary. Instead he brought Said Pasha to the front, and gave him this post. He proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him, and won not only the respect of the Sultan, but

WOMEN WHO ARE ALWAYS TIRED

May Find Help in This Letter.

Swan Creek, Mich.—“I cannot speak too highly of your medicine. When through neglect or overwork I get run down and my appetite is poor and I have that weak, languid, always tired feeling. I get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it builds me up, gives me strength, and restores me to perfect health again. It is truly a great blessing to women, and I cannot speak too highly of it. I take pleasure in recommending it to others.”—Mrs. ANNIE CAMERON, R.F.D., No. 1, Swan Creek, Michigan.

Another Sufferer Relieved.

Hebron, Me.—“Before taking your remedies I was all run down, discouraged and had female weakness. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and used the Sanative Wash, and find today that I am an entirely new woman, ready and willing to do my housework now, where before taking your medicine it was a dread. I try to impress upon the minds of all ailing women I meet the benefits they can derive from your medicines.”—Mrs. CHARLES ROWE, R. F. D., No. 1, Hebron, Maine.

BIRD DIVORCES.

athered World Has Social Institutions All Its Own.

Generally speaking, the social life birds is of the happiest description. Their courtship and marriage one long love song, and it often opens, as one famous naturalist put it, that while some young man couple are pouring out their arts to each other beneath the ves of an apple tree some feather-Romeo is making ardent love to coy, coquettish Juliet in the bushes above.

That clever student of bird life, s. Olive Thorn Miller, maintains it birds have a distinct social life their own, which is full of interest to the careful observer. The most important feature of their life is that marriages are permanent, implying constancy in their affections, which proof may be found everywhere.

Parrots are notably devoted birds, and are willing to make great sacrifices for their mates. She instances as where one of a caged pair had nagged to make her escape into open air. The owner of the birds, having observed the attachment between them, hung the cage in the deserted one in it, at the window. His calls reached his away mate and soon persuaded her to forsake the attractions of the inner woods and return to share

OUR MINDS AND HEALTH.

Power of Suggestion of Great Help In Curing Sick.

The power of suggestion in helping sick men to recover their health has played its part in folk-medicine at least since the beginning of history, according to Dr. Abram Lipsky. Even the Assyrians practiced it.

“Scientific psychotherapy has undoubtedly taken this hint of reinforcing verbal suggestion with a trivial action from popular practice. The device is perhaps best known in popular medicine as applied to the cure of warts. You strike the wart downwards three times with the knot of a reed as you make your auto-suggestion, or you rub it seven times with the third finger of the left hand in the direction in which the sun moves; or you wet your forefinger with saliva and stroke the wart in the direction of a passing funeral; or you touch each wart with a pebble, place the pebbles in a bag and lose them—the finder getting the warts; or you tie as many knots in a hair as you have warts and throw the hair away; or you steal a piece of bacon, rub the wart and slip the bacon under the bark of an ash tree thus causing the warts to disappear from your hand and appear on the bark; or you get another, by hook or crook, to count your warts, when they will pass over to him.

MIND AND HEALTH.

Physical Conditions Often at the Mercy of Mental Attitudes.

A scientist writes: “A woman fancied she had swallowed a frog and was rapidly sinking. The efforts of physicians failed to afford her relief. It occurred to some one that she might be deluded into health. A tiny frog was caught and put into a tube with which they were attempting to wash out her stomach. When the frog was thrown out of the tube the girl expressed relief and said she hoped they were satisfied her complaints had a real foundation. In a short time she was restored to health. This is only one of the instances in which the mind has affected the physical condition.

“No one doubts that persons have been frightened to death, and ridicule in statements of this kind should end. The influence of the mind is a subject which calls for investigation and study. There is no question that mental agitation aggravates, if it does not cause, disease. Many a child droops and dies because it feels it is unappreciated and neglected. Many who survive drag out a miserable existence instead of being full of hope and joy and energy, promise and pleasure and making themselves useful in the world.”—New York Press ping constancy in their affections, of which proof may be found everywhere.)

Parrots are notably devoted birds, and are willing to make great sacrifices for their mates. She instances a case where one of a caged pair had managed to make her escape into the open air. The owner of the birds, having observed the attachment between them, hung the cage, with the deserted one in it, at the open window. His calls reached his runaway mate and soon persuaded her to forsake the attractions of the summer woods and return to share his prison.

Grief at the death of their mates is nearly always shown by birds, and some species mourn for what might seem an incredible length of time. They frequently return to the old haunts, flying about and calling as if they hoped to be able to find the lost one again. Another instance of the affection between them is the attention almost invariably shown by the male to the female while the latter is hatching the young brood. He brings her food, sings to her, and often shares the task of sitting on the eggs, thereby giving her an opportunity for rest.

"I am sorry to say, however," says Mrs. Miller, "that in spite of this usually happy state of domestic affairs, there are occasionally unmistakable instances of bird divorce. Sometimes it is the husband who tires of his spouse and drives her away to make room for a new bride. Again it is the wife, who, perhaps, makes up her mind that the father of the family is not providing properly for its wants, and rejects him on that score. In one case of the kind which I watched I am sure this was the trouble. The husband was a cripple, from an injury to his leg, and was certainly rather helpless. But he opposed vehemently all efforts to drive him away, and succeeded in maintaining his authority until he was again able to care for his household.

EVER SEE A PINK MONKEY?

This South American Brand Is Worse Than The Other Kind.

If you should ever happen to be wandering about the Choco section of Colombia it would be well to have an eye out for the sobbing monkey. If his animal gets on your trail you might as well ring down the curtain and put a period after yourself.

When it gets after the Colombian Indians, according to H. G. Spurrell, naturalist and member of the London school of Tropical Medicine, the Indian listens to the beast's soul withering obs for three days and three nights and then commits suicide.

Mr. Spurrell says that the sobbing monkey is pink and is one of the most are animals in South America. For reasons that have never been made clear the sobbing monkey will at certain times in the year leave its home in the most impenetrable wilderness and go to the nearest Indian encampment, where it will select its victim and follow him day and night, keeping up a continual weeping and wailing.

According to tribal traditions this is sure sign that the victim will shortly be taken with the sleeping sickness or some other fatal disease. It has been customary for the natives to listen to the monkey's sobbing for three days and three nights and then commit suicide, thus avoiding death by the dreadful sickness.—New York Mail.

finger with saliva and stroke the wart in the direction of a passing funeral; or you touch each wart with a pebble, place the pebbles in a bag and lose them—the finder getting the warts; or you tie as many knots in a hair as you have warts and throw the hair away; or you steal a piece of bacon, rub the wart and slip the bacon under the bark of an ash tree thus causing the warts to disappear from your hand and appear on the bark; or you get another, by hook or crook, to count your warts, when they will pass over to him.

"Let it not be supposed that the foregoing remedies are merely prescriptions, but not cures. Innumerable experiments have been made with them by persons who sincerely believed in their efficacy, and the evidence of their success is as abundant as that of the success of more academic methods—and those enumerated do not begin to exhaust the list—shows that the particular differences between them are of no consequence, but that any device based on the faith of the patient may be employed to utilize the control which the mind, under certain circumstances, may exercise over the so-called vegetative processes of the human system.

"That the most powerful suggestion may fail of its object is, of course, perfectly well known. A case is reported of a German peasant, unpleasantly endowed with too many warts, who stood on his head in a newly-made grave. To a superstitious yokel this was an extremely powerful suggestion, but the warts remained.

"The strange, the mysterious and the weird have great suggestive potency, and hence drugs culled at unearthly hours, during unusual conjunctions of the moon and planets, on St. John's Eve or St. Agnes' Eve, have unusual curative properties."

Dr. Lipsky says that the practice of medicine even to-day is an art based largely upon the empirical tales learned from the experience of the common people. Scientific medicine, he says, has in the past adopted into its pharmacopoeia a great many of the "simples" cherished by the common people, but has discarded their innumerable hints as to the value of psychotherapy, and is now beginning to turn to this neglected wisdom, to make use of spiritual "simples," and to learn what curative powers reside in the soul.

Mole Superstitions.

According to tradition, if you have a mole on your chin you may expect to be wealthy, while if you have it under your arm it promises you wealth and honor as well. A mole on the ankle indicates courage. On the left temple a mole indicates that you will find friends among the great ones of the earth, but if it be placed on the right temple it warns you of coming distress. A mole on a man's knee means that he may expect to marry a rich woman. A mole on the neck promises wealth. If you have a mole on your nose you are going to be a great traveler. A mole on the throat indicates health and wealth.

came Sultan. In proof of his earnestness he signed a document in which among other things he agreed that Sadullah Bey, a noted reformer, should be his First Secretary. Soon afterward Murad was confined in a castle, and Abdul Hamid became Sultan. One of the first acts was to repudiate the promise to appoint a reformer as his First Secretary. Instead he brought Said Pasha to the front, and gave him this post. He proved himself worthy of the confidence reposed in him, and won not only the respect of the Sultan, but of foreign diplomats. The result was that at the close of the Russo-Turkish war, when Europe demanded reforms in Turkey, Said Pasha was made Grand Vizier and entrusted with the task of carrying them out.

However, it was no part of the Sultan's plans to have the reforms introduced, and the palace clique soon made things so unpleasant for Said Pasha that he retired, and for thirteen years lived quietly on his estate. When the Sultan found himself deserted by his friends, with the Young Turks knocking upon his castle walls, he remembered Said Pasha, and he was suddenly recalled and was appointed to reside over the final assembly when the new and the old regime met for the last time. The council was in doubt what course to pursue. From all parts of the country came rumors of insurrections; whether they were for or against the Sultan nobody seemed to know. Then Abdul Houdd, the old court astrologer, was carried into the council chamber upon a litter. He was asked for his advice, and instead of giving it proceeded to tell each member what was in his own mind. Most of them were for the disposition of the Sultan, though none dared say it. There was a silence.

Then Said Pasha said: "Silence gives consent." So it was decided, and at once the news was sent to Abdul Hamid. Having presided over the last council of the old regime, Said Pasha was asked to become Grand Vizier under the new. He consented. To him was entrusted the task of drawing up a form of constitution for the new Sultan to sign. It was found that in this document, instead of following instructions, he had left the appointment of the Minister of War and the Minister of Marine in the hands of the Sultan. Since these were the two departments most notorious for bribery and corruption the constitution had provided that they should be filled by nominees of the Grand Vizier. The Young Turks felt that they had almost been betrayed and Said Pasha retired in disgrace. Two years later, however, he was called again, and while he and Kiamil Pasha lived it was to them more than to any of their own leaders that the Young Turks looked for counsel.

A Lonesome Donkey.

One summer Mr. Oakes, an eminent lawyer, sent his wife and young daughter to a farmhouse in the White mountains for a vacation. Shortly after he received an urgent request from the little girl to send her a pet donkey to use while there. She had read about donkeys and heard about them, but was not at all familiar with their peculiar vocalism.

The donkey arrived, and the child and many rides around the vicinity. She enjoyed it all hugely, except the animal's strange noises, which inspired her with the profoundest pity for his evident distress.

One day after vainly trying to subdue his vocalism she wrote a letter to her father, in which she said:

"Dear Father—I do wish you would come up here soon, my donkey is so very lonesome."—National Monthly.

The Duelist's Disease.

Dr. Pean, a Paris physician, was called as a physician to attend a duel. One of the adversaries was so cowardly that he ran away after the first shot, unhurt. The four seconds, the remaining combatant and the doctor stood looking at each other with embarrassment and discomfiture when Dr. Pean broke the silence by saying gravely, "I know the disease that has suddenly attacked this gentleman." And, taking out his pencil and paper, he drew up a report as follows: "At the first shot Mr. X. was taken with a sudden attack of tachypodia that would not yield to treatment. The seconds therefore, on consultation with the physician, stopped the duel." Thus "honor" was saved.

AN APPEAL TO WOMEN'S INSTITUTES.

Toronto, Ont., Aug., 22nd, 1914

Dear Sir:—

A number of Women's Institutes in the Province responded most liberally to the appeal for funds to supply a hospital ship to the Imperial Navy. Many others are prepared to give money donations and to supply articles of clothing, etc., to the soldiers. In view of the fact that many inquiries have been made of the Department we have circularized the Institutes giving them authority to send such proportion of the funds on hand as they can spare to the Red Cross Society. They have also been asked to do their part in collecting funds and supplying the articles listed below. Circulars have been sent only to the officers and we are asking the press of the province to give publicity to the appeal.

LIST OF REQUIREMENTS.

3000 pillows—sizes, 18x30; 16x21; 16x16; 14x16 and slips for the same.
3000 to 4000 flannel shirts—sizes—15 to 17½, made of medium weight, grey or Khaki colour.
10,000 to 12,000 handkerchiefs—sizes—18x18, made of cheese cloth which should be washed before made up.
2,000 to 3,000 Cholera Belts—12 in. wide and 34 in. to 44 in. long. To be made of ordinary yarn, either red or grey, two inches of each end to be knitted with steel needles.
6,000 to 7,000 pairs of socks—Grey preferred.

5,000 "Housewives" or "Mending Kits." Outside to be made of course linen, chints, cretonne, duck or other smooth strong material. Sizes 5½x13. Interior to be lined with shaker flannel or any fine woolen material. Interior to contain two small pockets, one at end and one in centre. Also attach two loose squares, stitched loosely for pins and needles, etc. Each should contain safety pins, sewing and darning needles, small straight scissors, buttons (ordinary shirt and bachelor), black darning wool, black and white linen thread, small package of court plaster, and foot ease powder, if possible. Sew taps on end for ties.

We trust to your co-operation in this good work.

Very truly yours,

Gen. A. Putnam.

THE LATEST [WAR TIDING

Paris, August 26, (Wednesday) 1914 a.m.—The War Office has issued following official announcement.

"The Commander-in-chief, requiring all available forces on the Meuse, ordered the progressive abandonment of occupied territory. Moulhausen again been evacuated.

"A new battle is in progress between Maubeuge (Department of Nord) and Donon (Department of Doubs.) On it hangs the fate of France. Operations in Alsace along the Rhine would take away troops upon which might depend victory. It is necessary that they all withdraw from Alsace temporarily, in order to ensure its final deliverance. It is a matter of hard necessity.

WHEREABOUTS OF BRITISH.

"West of the Meuse, as a result of orders issued on Sunday by the Commander-in-Chief, the troops which to remain on the covering line take up the defensive are massed follows: The French and British troops occupy a front passing Gi which they gained by hard fight. They are holding their adversary and sharply checking their attack.
"East of the Meuse our troops have regained their original position commanding the roads out of great forest of Ardennes.

AGAIN ASSUME THE OFFENSIVE.

"To the right we assumed the offensive, driving back the enemy in vigorous onslaught, but General Joffre stopped pursuit so to re-establish front along the line decided upon Sunday. In this attack our troops showed admirable dash. The British Corps notably inflicted punishment on the enemy close to Vitoron.

"In Lorraine the two armies have begun a combined attack, one striking from Grand Couronne de Ne and the other from south of La Ville. The engagement, which began yesterday (Monday), continues at time of writing. The sound of cannonading is not heard at Nancy, as was yesterday."

ATTACKS AGAINST NANCY FAILED.

London, Aug. 25, 11.45 p.m.—French Embassy in London to-night issued the following statement:

"The movement which was yesterday by order of the Commander-in-Chief was continued to-day without successful opposition by enemy. It is confirmed that a Prussian corps of Guards were roughly handled in the recent fighting. They were attacked by Algerian riflemen and in the hand-to-hand fighting which ensued the Germans suffered heavily.

"The attacks against Nancy failed.

"The Prussians are resolutely pushing forward their offensive movement in Galicia, and have routed two divisions of Austrian cavalry."

The Hague (via London), Aug. 26.—The military correspondent of Nieuw Couant declares he is able to state on trustworthy authority that the Germans had to abandon temporarily East and West Prussia and Pomerania to the Russians withdraw slowly to the River Odra where the main defences of Berlin "Germany", according to the respondent, "appears to have undertaken this measure to give time for her army operating against France to deal the British and French armies their death blow and their march on to Paris."

The Hague (via London), Aug. 26. The military correspondent of the Nieuw Couant declares he is able to state on trustworthy authority that the Germans had to abandon temporarily East and West Prussia and Pomerania to the Russians as withdraw slowly to the River Oder where the main defences of Berlin lie. "Germany," according to the correspondent, "appears to have undertaken this measure to give time for her army operating against France try to deal the British and French armies their death blow and then march on to Paris."

St Petersburg, (via London), Aug. 26, 10.20 p.m.—The Germans in the Elbing district of West Prussia, near the Vistula River, are fleeing westward before the Russian advance.

London, Aug. 26—Wireless message from Berlin, picked up by the Macconi station and made public by the Government here, say it is official admitted in a bulletin published by the German War Office that the Germans have "temporarily retired before a concentrated Russian advance in Eastern Prussia."

A St. Petersburg despatch to the Reuter Telegram Co. says that the Russian troops in Eastern Prussia have occupied the towns of Nordburg, Sensburg and Bischofsburg and the railway station at Rothblies and adds that the Russian advance continues.

In eastern Galicia the Russians have driven back the Austrian rearguard beyond the River Zlota Lipa which runs north and south, about thirty miles west of Tarnopol.

Paris, Aug. 26.—According to Englishmen arriving from Mons, the British army was attacked six times by six different bodies of German and beat them all off. They report that the allies made a hecatomb of the Germans near Mons. Certain part of the field, they declare, were covered with German dead piled so high that the Turks, the French African troops had difficulty in getting over the bodies to attack Prussian guards.

Commissioners may be appointed for various districts with power to deal with flagrant cases. The Government now has power to take possession of all food supplies in the country if necessary and to dispose of them as seems best in the public interest.

Army telegraphers are wanted for the Canadian engineers. The British army uses the continental code, which is somewhat different from the code used by the commercial telegraphers in this country, and this makes it harder to secure men.

A. S. Kimmerly has to hand a full car of seed corn of the following varieties: Giant, Prolific, Sweet Ensilage, Leaming, White Cop, Yellow Dent, Stowell's Evergreen, Longfellow Comptons Early, North Dakota White Flint. I pay $1 per bus. for wheat. Sugars still selling at old prices, as before the allowance.

LATEST WAR TIDINGS

August 26, (Wednesday) 12.10
The War Office has issued the official announcement.

The Commander-in-chief, requiring available forces on the Meuse, has ordered the progressive abandonment of territory. Meulhausen has been evacuated.

A new battle is in progress between Maubeuge (Department of the Nord) and Donon (Department of the Moselle). On it hangs the fate of France.
The lines in Alsace along the Rhine take away troops upon which depend victory. It is necessary that they all withdraw from the Meuse temporarily, in order to assure their final deliverance. It is a matter of hard necessity.

HERFABOUTS OF BRITISH.

East of the Meuse, as a result of the British issued on Sunday by the Commander-in-Chief, the troops which are main on the covering line to up the defensive are massed as follows: The French and British occupy a front passing Givet, they gained by hard fighting.
The British are holding their adversaries harshly checking their attacks.
East of the Meuse our troops regained their original positions and the roads out of the forest of Ardennes.

TO ASSUME THE OFFENSIVE.

It is the right we assumed the offensive, driving back the enemy by a series of onslaughts, but General Joffre did not pursue so to re-establish his position along the line decided upon on August 25. In this attack our troops did admirable dash. The Sixth notably inflicted punishment on the enemy close to Virton.

Lorraine the two armies have a combined attack, one starting from Grand Couronne de Nancy the other from south of Lunéville.
The engagement, which began on Monday, continues at the front of writing. The sound of canon-is not heard at Nancy, as it was yesterday.

CHANCES AGAINST NANCY FAIL.

London, Aug. 25, 11.45 p.m.—The British Embassy in London to-night issued the following statement:

"The movement which was begun yesterday by order of the Commander-in-Chief was continued to-day without successful opposition by the enemy. It is confirmed that a Prussian corps of Guards were roughly defeated in the recent fighting. They were attacked by Algerian riflemen, in the hand-to-hand fighting ensued the Germans suffered severe losses. The Germans suffered severe losses."

The attacks against Nancy have been repulsed.

The Prussians are resolutely pushing forward their offensive movement in the direction of Nancy, and have routed two divisions of Austrian cavalry."

Hague (via London), Aug. 26—
The military correspondent of The Hague declares he is able to report trustworthy authority that the Germans had to abandon temporarily East and West Prussia Pomerania to the Russians and retreat slowly to the River Oder.
The main defences of Berlin lie in the "main defences of Berlin lie in Germany," according to the correspondent, "appears to have undertaken this measure to give time to the army operating against France to deal the British and French their death blow and then to march on to Paris."

UNION STOCK YARDS.

TORONTO, Aug. 24.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 103 cars, comprising 1937 cattle, 1269 hogs, 605 sheep and lambs and 235 calves.

Butchers' Cattle.

Choice steers, $8.60 to $9, and one extra choice load at $10.10; loads of good, $8.25 to $8.50; medium, $7.50 to $7.75; common to medium, $7.25 to $7.50; inferior heifers, $6.50 to $7; choice cows, $6.75 to $7; good cows, $6.25 to $6.50; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; common cows, $3 to $4.50; choice bulls, $6.25 to $7.25; common bulls, $5 to $6.25.

Stockers and Feeders.

Deliveries were moderate and demand fair. Prices were about steady on a slow market, as buyers as a rule wanted better quality. Choice steers, $7 to $7.40; medium steers at $6.75 to $7; stockers, $5.50 to $6.50.

Milkers and Springers.

Choice milkers and springers sold at $75 to $100; good, $60 to $70; medium to good, $45 to $55.

Veal Calves.

Receipts moderate and values practically unchanged. Choice veal calves $10 to $10.50; good, $8.50 to $9.50; medium, $7.50 to $8.50; common, $6.50 to $7.50; inferior at $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep, light ewes, $5.75 to $6.25; heavy ewes and rams, $4 to $5.50; yearlings, $6.75 to $7; lambs, $7 to $8.50; culls, $5.50 to $6.

Hogs.

Selects fed and watered $10, and $10.25 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Aug. 24.—At the Montreal Stock Yards, wet and market, the receipts of live stock for week ending Aug. 22 were 2600 cattle, 1800 sheep and lambs, 2600 hogs and 1100 calves. The offerings on the market for sale this morning amounted to 1800 cattle, 1000 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 800 calves.

The feature of the trade continues to be the brisk demand from local packers, for canning stock, and as more than 50 per cent. of the offerings of cattle were that grade a very active trade was done at firm prices. Sales of bulls were made in round lots at $5 to $5.50, and cows at $3.90 to $4.50 per 100 pounds. The reason for such a brisk demand for this class at this season of the year is the fact that packers generally have received large orders from the Dominion Government for canned beef, and the indications are that the trade in this class will continue active until these orders are filled. There was no important change in the condition of the market for butchers' cattle, prices being well maintained under a fairly good demand and small supplies. A few loads of choice steers changed hands at $8.50 to $8.75, and small lots at $9 per 100 pounds, but the demand was principally for good steers at $8.25 to $8.50.

ROWELL NOT PROTESTED.

Mr. Rowell's election in North Oxford has not been protested. His opponents filed a petition but did not deposit $1000 within four days as required and the proceedings therefore, were declared void. The protests which will definitely go on are those by the Conservatives against MacLarg in Cochrane and by the Liberals against Dr. Martyn in East Lambton.

It is the general opinion that there was never any real intention of protesting Mr. Rowell's election. The local men in Woodstock disclaim responsibility. The Mail and Empire said in their news account that the petition had been filed upon instructions from Toronto solicitors. The Government, or liquor interests, or, perhaps both, evidently thought they might annoy Mr. Rowell by making this attack and then withdrawing it. They also thought that they might make a little cheap political capital out of the incident. Their plan has failed, however, and the unfairness of the move has aroused the resentment of fair-minded Conservatives as well as of Liberals themselves.

NEW ONTARIO DEVELOPMENT.

Road work in Northern Ontario, under the Northern Ontario development fund has been stopped for the season and hundreds of men, many of them with one or more teams, have been thrown out of employment weeks sooner than they had expected. It is alleged that this year's appropriation has already been expended. As a matter of fact, however, this fund is under the control of the Cabinet, not the Legislature, and they had the power to spend within the limit of $5,000,000. Up to the present less than $2,500,000 has been spent of the $4,300,000, the amount secured by the Government to carry on the work.

The trouble is that, as admitted in testimony given before the Public Accounts Committee by the Deputy Assistant Provincial Treasurer this spring, the rest of this money has been spent for other purposes and is, therefore, not on hand at this critical time. Otherwise the Government could have kept the men employed on the Northern roads until the very end of the season and thus have saved them from considerable distress.

Unemployment is bad enough as it is, especially with the war and general financial stringency, and although the government shows tardy signs making an attempt to deal with the problem in the province as a whole it is unfortunate that in North Ontario at any rate they have not things worse instead of better.

Pleasant For the Callers.

Two ladies made a formal call on a distant acquaintance. The maid asked them to wait until she ascertained whether the person inquired for in. Presently she tripped downstairs and announced that "the lady was at home." One of the callers, finding that she had forgotten her cards, said to her friend, "Let me write my name on your card."

"Oh, it isn't at all necessary, miss," put in the maid cheerfully; "I told who it was."—New York Globe.

For the Common Good.

Town planning, let it be understood, is not a movement to make towns beautiful in a superficial sense. Its purposes are fundamental. It aims consciously to provide those facilities that are for the common good, that concern everybody; it seeks to save waste, the almost incalculable waste due to unskillful and planless procedure, for by doing of things at the right time and in the right way comprehensive city planning saves far more than its cost. It endeavors also to establish the individuality of a city—to catch its peculiar spirit, to preserve its distinctive flavor, to accent its particular physical situation.—John Nolan.

DUSTBANE

Makes All The Difference !

ORDINARY sweeping stirs up clouds of fine, gray, microbe-laden dust, which settles back on furniture, curtains, picture-frames and wherever else a minute particle can find a resting place. It is breathed into the lungs of the people in the house, carrying danger of disease.

Sweeping with Dustbane is vastly different. The clean, antiseptic powder is propelled ahead of the broom, falling on and absorbing all the dust before it gets a chance to fly. All the germs are killed, the air is purified, and floors and carpets are left fresh and clean. There is practically no dusting to be done afterward, and most of that work is saved.

Every woman ought to know how Dustbane makes sweeping easier and more healthful. You can test Dustbane in your own home, free of cost, through our

A Tangled Web

BY MRS. ALEXANDER

Author of "Beaton's Bargain," "His Perfect Trust,"
"By Another Name," "Her Heart's Idol," "Half a Truth," "His Rival."

"It is more than a fancy, Nora. I am very, very, sorry for Clifford."

Nora's only reply was a burst of tears.

"Oh! I must tell him," she said. "I will show him this letter, and tell him. I do not deserve that he should quarrel with his only sister for my sake."

Mrs. L'Estrange did not reply. She was too puzzled and distressed to see the fair fabric of joy and happiness that she had seen grow up crumble to dust at a touch.

Nora dried her tears.

"I am weak and selfish, Helen. But I do want to act rightly. Do you think that Clifford is quite true, or that he is impulsive enough to misrepresent a thing he wishes for very much?"

"I don't quite understand you. But I am sure Clifford Marsden is an honorable gentleman, who would never knowingly deceive any one."

"Oh! I suppose so—I suppose so," despondingly.

"How shall I answer this horrid letter?" asked Mrs. L'Estrange.

"Do not answer it for a day or two, not till I have shown it to Clifford. It is possible things may arrange themselves."

Angry though she was at the unwarrantable assertions in Lady Dorrington's hasty, ill-judged letter, it gave Nora a gleam of hope, or rather it offered her an opportunity of suggesting to Marsden the expediency of breaking off their engagement. This would be to her an infinite relief. It is true that her freedom might secure peace, but not happiness. She would probably never see Winton again, save, perhaps, for a brief formal farewell; but, at least, she would not be forced into a marriage which she dreaded more and more as the days rolled by. If she could only prove Marsden's integrity! Was he really under the impression that Mark Winton, the Mark she knew, had been Helen's lover, or had he misrepresented the facts?

Time was flying fast. In less than six weeks—unless her intended effort to extricate herself succeeded—she would be Marsden's wife. It was extraordinary—it was terrible—the reluctance with which she contemplated what many would consider so fair a prospect.

It was the second day after the receipt of Lady Dorrington's letter that Marsden returned from Evesleigh.

He was charmed to find Nora alone as she usually did her best to include her step-mother in their interviews. Marsden looked bright and joyous, as became a bridegroom elect. He had had a prosperous journey, and all things were coming round to his wishes. Fortune smiled upon him; he had but to play boldly, and he would break the bank of ill-luck which had hitherto raked in all his stakes.

After he had greeted Nora with his usual warmth, he noticed that she was white and cold and tremulous, and he drew her to the light, looking into her face with an then? Magnanimity which I suspect does not cost you much," said Marsden bitterly.

"Clifford," said Nora, determined to be brave and honest, feeling her courage reviving with the sincerity of her resolution, "I will be true, though it hurts me horribly to speak the truth to you. You ought not to throw away every consideration of prudence, perhaps duty, for the sake of a girl who does not, can not, love you as you ought to be loved for making such sacrifices. I ought not to have promised what I did. Can you ever forgive me, if I beg of you to give up the idea of marrying me? I should disappoint you, I fear I should?"

"Forgive you!" repeated Marsden quietly. "Never!" His hand, which lay on the sofa cushions, clinched itself tight. "If you persist in breaking with me, if you attempt to juggle me—but you are too wise, too kindly! My sister talks of what she does not understand. I certainly will not attempt to reside at Evesleigh, and throw open my house to the county for some time, but I am by no means in the straits she imagines or invents; and even if I were, no amount of fortune, no advantages would atone to me for you—I love you—I want you—and nothing shall separate us."

"But, Clifford, shall you be happy with me, if I can not love you?"

"Love as I do?" cried Marsden, starting up to take a hasty turn, and throwing himself on the sofa again. "That you never can! Nature forbids it! but you shall be my wife, and give me what tenderness you can!"

Nora began to feel indignant at his tone.

"If you really loved me, you should think of my happiness as well as your own."

"I do! I only care to make you happy! But I don't want any one else to make you happy. Nora! it can not be possible that after your solemn promise to me, you want to draw back? There is something I do not understand here, something more than Isabel's letter."

"Her letter brought on a climax; but I have been uneasy for some time, frightened at the responsibilities I was going to undertake, frightened at my own want of affection for you; though I do like you, and I am miserable at making you unhappy!"

"Then save your misery and my unhappiness! Marry me, marry me willingly—for marry me you must."

"Are you so resolved?" asked Nora, changing color and feeling alarmingly faint.

"I am; even though I think I have hit on the solution of the riddle," said Marsden, rising and confronting her. "You may not love me, but you love some one else!"

Nora was silent. Falseness in every shape was abhorrent to her, yet truth in this case was terrible; how could she confess her weakness! Marsden's eyes, full of deadly rage, were fixed on her. "I am right? You do not reply!" Then, Nora, with a Clifford," she said in a low voice. She was beginning to feel quite exhausted. "Think over all I have said, and so will I of what you have urged."

"I will do anything you like, save one thing," he interrupted, "but no reflection will change me. I see all this has been too much for you. I will leave you for the present, and in a day or two I trust to find you reconciled to the dreadful alternative of keeping your promise to me."

Nora bent her head in silence, and after looking at her for a minute or two with a glance of mingled anger and admiration, Clifford said with a short laugh:

"Curiously enough, I am summoned to-morrow to see the rival to whom you would fain hand me over—on business, she says. I wonder if she could invent a bribe big enough to induce me to give you up, Nora?"

He took and kissed her hand, pressing it painfully hard.

"If I did not love you so madly, how I could hate you!" he said between his teeth, and hastily left the room.

CHAPTER XV.

Dispite his cool indifference to the opinions and interests of others, Marsden felt that he should be as well pleased that his interview with Mrs. Ruthven was over. It is true that she seemed a mere frivolous, fanciful trifler much taken up with the outside of things; but instinct rather than any deliberate thought impressed him with the conviction that beneath her pretty draperies was a heart of steel, which would never melt, though you might strike fire from it, and an iron will, tenacious to carry out her purposes, great or small. He knew better than any one else that, a short time ago, he had only to ask and he would have been accepted; and, thinking that such might have been his destiny, he had done his best to prepare and smooth the way. From this, his supreme good luck had delivered him.

Even if he had not fallen headlong in love with Nora L'Estrange, there was much in Mrs. Ruthven which dimly displeased him. She was carefully well-bred, yet her manners had not the indescribable ease or grace of one born in the purple, there was an under-tone of animalism in her tastes and looks; moreover, he shrewdly suspected that fidelity to a husband would be with her very much a matter of accident, though he did her the justice to believe that she would always keep up appearances.

In fact, she was an admirably composed morsel of Paris paste, excellently set and pleasant to the eye, until placed beside a brilliant of the purest water, like Nora.

However, the visit had to be paid, so Marsden made a careful toilet and set out to keep his appointment.

It was some time since they had met, indeed, since their encounter in Paris; but previous spring, they had not been so long apart.

Mr. Ruthven was fully dressed in black silk and velvet, with a handkerchief of creamy lace knotted round her neck, and a dainty cap of the same on her thick, short hair. Her costume seemed to indicate that the business in hand was too serious for the easy negligence of a morning gown.

Marsden thought her looking better than he had ever seen her before. The debility and languor of slow convalescence had spiritualized her expression, and given more refinement to her movements. He could even understand how some men might think her charming, a charming toy. There was something unusual too, in the earnestness with which she look-or two of the manuscript before him and resting her clasped hands on a fixed her eyes on her companion.

"I had," she began, "a clever, mere trifle, which no one knew save myself, and when I came up from Evesleigh, I sent for a man of whom I had heard, no matter how, a man of keen, trained intelligence, for I saw that the regular solemn English detective, with his heavy precautions and transparent devices, was merely announcing to the criminal world, have a secret inquiry to conceal." sent for this man, I gave him, him only, my clew."

"And why did you not give it at least to me," cried Marsden, "when I was tearing my heart out in fruitless efforts to recover your jewels?"

"I will tell you presently. Well, the employee of mine, led by my—my suggestions, fixed upon an individual whom he thought might possibly have been the robber or agent of the robber, and shadowed him" (she emphasized the word with cruel bitterness) "For days he followed the unconscious thief, in various disguises; last, after keeping him in sight with infinite difficulty, he watched him leaving a country house not far from St. Germain."

Marsden's expression changed from polite attention to deep gravity.

"At a station midway to Paris got out, a small valise in his hand. The detective followed. It was early afternoon, and a few passengers were traveling; the suspected thief went into a first-class carriage, with small dark mustaches, a low-crowned bowler hat, such as Englishmen wear in the country, and a long loose overcoat. He came out at a station some ten miles off in a sort of frock coat, rather shabby, braided and fitted badly, a soft black felt hat pulled over his eyes and a large light mustache; his overcoat was hanging from his arm, and he still carried his valise. Here he waited some time, reading a paper, which he held before his face, and finally, as it began to grow dusk, he took a third-class ticket for Paris; my employee traveled in the same carriage," she turned a page.

"It is too long to tell how he traced him that night to an obscure street in the Marais, to the shop of a Polish Jew dealer in precious stones where he held a long parley, and then back to a shabby cafe, where he engaged a room for the night—he went to it, after partaking of some wine and food. When his pursuer had ascertained that he was locked in for the night, he returned to the shop, ought to have told you, that the man was himself the son of a Polish Jew, and spoke the language well. He made himself known to the owner of the shop, told some story of having been on the outlook for jewels, and, in short, persuaded his companion to let him hide in a corner where he could witness the interview arranged for next day. I am dwelling too much on details, perhaps. Ultimately my employee witnessed the sale of ten large unset rubies for a price, which, though high, was not enough for their value, and he saw the face of the man who sold them."

"Indeed!" with a slightly contemptuous accent; "and may I ask what was your clew?"

"There it is," cried Mrs. Ruthven, raising her voice for the first time above the level tone at which she had kept it, and drawing her breath in a deep sob, as she took out of a small leather case, and threw to him a diamond stud. He had grown perfectly colorless, but the hand with which he took up the stud was steady.

"And what does this prove?" asked.

"That Clifford Marsden, of Evesleigh Manor, is a felon!" she answered, fierce exultation lighting clude her step-mother in their interviews. Marsden looked bright and joyous, as became a bridegroom elect. He had had a prosperous journey, and all things were coming round to his wishes. Fortune smiled upon him; he had but to play boldly, and he would break the bank of ill-luck which had hitherto raked in all his stakes.

After he had greeted Nora with his usual warmth, he noticed that she was white and cold and tremulous, and he drew her to the light, looking into her face with eager questioning eyes, while he held her hands firmly though gently.

"You have something unpleasant, some bad news for me, Nora?" he said. "Out with it, dearest, I am not afraid."

"Yes! something very unpleasant, a very unjust letter from Lady Dorrington if you will let my hands go, I will give it to you."

"Is that all?" in a tone of relief, as he released her, "I fully expected Isabel would be about as disagreeable as could be managed."

Nora took the letter from her pocket and gave it to him. She could hardly stand, so deep was her agitation. She sunk into the chair near which she stood, and watched Marsden while he read.

His face expressed no great emotion; a slightly contemptuous look, an occasional frown, that was all.

"Well! there is nothing very tremendous in this," he cried, turning to his fiancée and leaning his arms on the top of a high chair opposite her; "it is a most improper letter, and I shall insist on Lady Dorrington making the fullest apology to Mrs. L'Estrange and yourself. But she can not forbid the bans, or interfere in any way, so you need not trouble about her preposterous nonsense."

"But, Clifford, I can not help troubling! I am distressed about Mrs. Ruthven. Of course I know very little about her, or how you stand with her, but I did think that time at Evesleigh you intended to marry her, and perhaps she thought so too?"

"My dear girl, you can no more understand a woman such as Mrs. Ruthven than you can read Sanskrit or Amharic. She can't do without lovers, admirers I should say, and as an attentive host I was bound to supply her needs."

"But were there not others who would do as well as you?"

"None would have quite the same effect as the bachelor master of the house. My darling, is it possible that your honor me by being jealous?"

"No, Clifford, I am not jealous—but—but I wish—you could, without too much pain, gratify Lady Dorrington and give me up."

"Ah! I see, magnanimity, not jealousy, is your line."

He kept his light tone, but his eyes darkened, and his face grew hard.

"I want—I want you to listen quietly, Clifford," she returned, feeling her mouth parched and scarcely able to utter the words she forced herself to speak. "You will be angry but I feel I ought to tell you all that is in my mind."

"I am always glad to listen to you," said Marsden, giving her back the letter and throwing himself on the sofa.

"Don't you think, Clifford, there is some truth in what your sister says? If you need Mrs. Ruthven's fortune so much, and I suppose Lady Dorrington knows, is it not foolish to increase your difficulties—to vex your only near relative, who loves you so much, by marrying a girl who is willing to give you up if it is for your good?"

"It is the magnanimous trick,

"Are you so resolved?" asked Nora, changing color and feeling alarmingly faint.

"I am; even though I think I have hit on the solution of the riddle," said Marsden, rising and confronting her. "You may not love me; but you love some one else!"

Nora was silent. Falsehood in every shape was abhorrent to her, yet truth in this case was terrible; how could she confess her weakness! Marsden's eyes, full of deadly rage, were fixed on her. "I am right? You do not reply?" Then, Nora, with a sudden flash of courage, determined that all concealment should be swept away. "You are right, Clifford," she said, coloring crimson, throat and cheeks and ears. "But I thought I had got over it all, that it would trouble me no more; and I do humbly pray you to forgive me for deceiving you, as well as myself."

"Forgive you! of course I forgive you, my sweetest, my darling!" he exclaimed. "I only want you to love me now. If you will but give me the fragments which remain, I am satisfied! I will even bless that solemn rectangular prig Winton, for trampling the divine pearl of your tenderness under his feet, so that it may come to me in any shape."

"Why do you imagine—that makes you think of Mr. Winton?" faltered Nora, vaguely distressed by his tone, and shocked beyond description at the notion of having betrayed herself.

"Who else could it be? Unless, indeed, some very juvenile affair, with a Teutonic baron or graf abroad," he laughed harshly. "I do not mind Winton. He never could love as I do. He has a sort of chilled-shot attachment to your pretty step-mother, which may—"

"There you are mistaken," interrupted Nora quickly. "Which of the two Wintons did you believe her engaged to?"

Marsden turned and looked sharply at her. "You have been exchanging confidences with Mrs. L'Estrange?" he said.

"I have received hers."

"It was Black Mark Winton who was for a while engaged to her; but your friend was attached to her too!" returned Marsden.

"You told me—you implied—he was engaged," murmured Nora.

"Oh, I see. You mean I deceived you? I really can not remember what I said—only what I believed. But that is of no consequence. I want you to understand me, Nora. I will not give you up. I hold you to your promise. Keep it, and I'll gladly devote my life to you. Bravely—no, I will not believe that! I do not think of it! Nora, do not desert me! All the good that's left in me, clings round you. If you shake me off, I know I shall go to the devil, and it will be the worse for you. I know what I am capable of, I could be damnably cruel."

"Do not suppose you can frighten me," cried Nora, roused to anger by the shadow of a threat. "I care too much for you not to feel infinite pain in disappointing you; but I will not submit to be bullied!"

"Great heavens! You misunderstood me. I do not know what I am saying, Nora! You must not be faithless. Look here, I am utterly dependent on you for my future. I have no hope, no life, apart from you, and I hold you to your promise, as I cling to salvation. On your head be it whatever becomes of me without you! My love! my soul! do not turn from me. I will never give you up! I claim you, whatever happens."

The profound supplication of his voice, the entreaty of his speaking eyes, shook Nora's heart. Had she, indeed, any right to turn from one to whom she seemed so essential?

"Do not decide anything to-day, same on her thick, short hair. Her costume seemed to indicate that the business in hand was too serious for the easy negligence of a morning gown.

Marsden thought her looking better than he had ever seen her before. The debility and languor of slow convalescence had spiritualized her expression, and given more refinement to her movements. He could even understand how some men might think her charming, a charming toy. There was something unusual too, in the earnestness with which she looked into his eyes, something pained and reproachful in the expression of her own.

"I hope she is not going to make a scene," thought Marsden, as he greeted her cordially.

"You are very good for an unpunctual man, to be so punctual," she said graciously, but gravely.

"I was eager to see with my own eyes how you were progressing," he returned, smiling sweetly upon her. "You know you were cruel enough to reject my prayer for an interview at Chedworth."

"Yes, it was cruel considering how anxious you were about me," Marsden did not quite like her tone. "I want to speak to you about Evesleigh; there are one or two little matters you and I can settle better between ourselves than through our lawyers."

"More agreeably, I am sure!"

"Before I go into my own affairs, however, Mr. Marsden, I must congratulate you on your engagement with Miss L'Estrange. I always admired her. But your taste is unimpeachable." There was a kind of deadly composure in her manner that struck him as ominous.

"It's coming," he thought, while he said aloud, "You are very good! I am sure Nora has the highest appreciation of you, she has often spoken of you most warmly."

"She will appreciate me much more deeply and justly later on," returned Mrs. Ruthven, with a slight laugh. "Pray when does the marriage take place?"

"That is not settled yet."

"And I suppose your fair inexperienced fiancée is desperately in love with you? You have quite distanced Mr. Winton?"

"Well, I hope so," carelessly, feeling more and more uncomfortable.

"I should think you had, you are rather a fascinating sinner. I had a fancy for you at one time myself," and she glanced quickly at him. A glance fiery enough, half admiration, and half anger.

"Is it possible?" cried Marsden, with an exaggerated air of regret. "And how was I such an idiot as not to see it?"

"That unconsciousness and modesty for which you are celebrated, no doubt preserved you," she returned in a peculiar tone. "However, it is too late to talk of the past; besides, I have a curious story to tell you, in which, I am sure, you will be interested. Do you know I have found a trace of my rubies at last, and the day you marry Nora L'Estrange I will give her one of the best for a wedding present!"

"My dear Mrs. Ruthven, I am astonished and interested!" cried Marsden, struck by her tone and looking full at her. "Nor shall I—"

"Pray listen to me," she interrupted, leaving her seat by the fire, and drawing a chair to a writing-table at a little distance, where a number of closely written sheets fastened together with a clip, lay beside her blotting-book. "It is a long story, and I do not want to occupy your time more than I need."

"You rouse my curiosity," cried Marsden, placing himself opposite her.

Mrs. Ruthven turned over a page

"There it is," cried Mrs. Ruthven, raising her voice for the first time above the level tone at which she had kept it, and drawing her breath in a deep sob, as she took out of a small leather case, and threw to him a diamond stud. He had grown feetily colorless, but the hand which he took up the stud steady.

"And what does this prove?" asked.

"That Clifford Marsden, of I sleigh Manor, is a felon!" she answered, fierce exultation lighting her face and gleaming in her eyes. "Do you think I did not recognize the peculiar setting of the diamond which caught my hair in that w—that waltz—"

She stopped, her breast heaving. "I know I lost this stud," said Marsden, very deliberately, "on that unlucky evening, and never could it; but why should not the robber have picked it up, if he found it, he most probably did, in the tent."

"You are a brave man to face me, you do!" she exclaimed. "But hold you in my hand," and climbed it. "I will tell you where I found it, and where! Your sweet beloved fiancée, when paying me a private visit in my room, admiring my ball-dress, espied the glitter that diamond among the lace on my body, where it had dropped when you struggled to stupefy me with your horrible chloroform. Me, the woman you had been making love to minutes before—who was ready to give you all she had—you base me in night thief!"

"Do not be so positive. Might not have fallen among your lace, we danced together, or when I was assisting to lift you?"

"No, no, no!" she cried, as if cried out of herself, and speaking with immense rapidity. "I saw it on your breast when you left me, and you, your Nora, told me you never touched me! It is useless denying your guilt. Wait, the detective, know you. He saw you here, here, here, before he started to pursue you. He was with you at Amstel dam, in Paris, at Chantilly when you went to your friend De Meudon. He traced you, he can swear to you. I have paid hundreds to prove it, and have you in my grasp!"

She stopped, panting.

Marsden rose slowly, his eyes fixed upon her. She was frightened by silence, his desperate look. She, too, rose; but her fury seemed to evaporate.

"What are you going to do, Marsden?" she said, quivering. "I would not murder me?"

He laughed a strange, discordant laugh.

"I am blackguard enough," said; "but I would not hurt a hair of your head. No! It is useless to contradict your assertions. You have me, indeed, in your grasp, and there is but one way of escape."

He moved to the door, but she was too quick for him. Setting her back against it she stretched out her arm to keep him off.

"You shall not kill yourself! forbid you! You are bad, and bad but you belong to me—you belong to me! No, Marsden, you shall leave me!"

"What is life to me?" asked Marsden, with a calm despair. "A honoring shackle! The sooner I am rid of it the better. I can not struggle with you. If you have any pity let me go!"

"I will not! I can not! Marsden, how I have hated you! You have been so unspeakable false! rob me, that you might shake me off and marry my rival. Yet," as her eyes softened as they rested on his fine face, so rigid in its desperate two of the manuscript before her, resting her clasped hands on it, and her eyes on her companion. "I had," she began, "a clew, a mere trifle, which no one knew save myself, and when I came up from vesleigh, I sent for a man of whom had heard, no matter how, a man keen, trained intelligence, for I saw at the regular solemn English detective, with his heavy precaution of transparent devices, was merely nouncing to the criminal world. "Indeed!" with a slightly contemptuous accent. "And may I ask at what your clew?"

"There it is," cried Mrs. Ruthven, singing her voice for the first time over the level tone at which she kept it, and drawing her breath a deep sob, as she took out of a small leather case, and threw to him, a diamond stud. He had grown perfectly colorless, but the hand with which he took up the stud was steady. "And what does this prove?" he asked. "That Clifford Marsden, of Eveleigh Manor, is a felon!" she answered, fierce exultation lighting up on his attitude, grand even in its expressive abandonment, "with all, I can not let you destroy yourself! If I could hope that gratitude would awaken anything like affection, tenderness!"

"I am not worth saving," interrupted Marsden, speaking more collectedly. He began to calculate chances. "I know I have done a dastardly deed. I never saw its full baseness till I was found out." He smiled a bitter, cynical smile. "That does not show much of a moral nature to work upon; but I have so much decency left that it is torture to be under your eye, to hear your just reproaches. I do not ask you for mercy. If you choose to call a policeman, do so. You would be in your right. I will not resist."

He folded his arms and stood quite still.

"And do you not know I should tear my own heart to pieces, if I injured you?" she cried, in a passion of anger and love. "Oh! I can save you! I will save you! if you promise to give me the love I long for! Can I not win you by such service as man never had offered him before? I can save more than your life."

"I have no love to give!" said Marsden in a low tone. "I have done with love and friendship; and, however generous you may be, how can you silence your detective?"

"I have bound up his interest with his discretion," she said eagerly, still keeping between Marsden and the door.

"I tell you, your bitterest revenge is to prevent my escaping life and its intolerable pangs."

"And I tell you," she cried, hardening again, "that if you kill yourself I will blazon the story of your felony, your shame, to the whole world! I will myself describe to Nora L'Estrange your disguises, your creeping to and fro to sell your plunder."

"Silence!" interrupted Marsden fiercely, making a step forward, then recovering himself. "It is not probable I can do anything to atone, to compensate. If I can—" he broke off.

Mrs. Ruthven paused and clasped her hands tightly together.

"If I hold my tongue none need ever know of your infamy," she said slowly. "It will be a secret between our two selves. Ought not that to be an indissoluble bond of union? There is not a breath of suspicion against you, Waite's interest is distinctly to be silent. If I choose to submit to so great a loss, that is by my affair."

"It is a tremendous if," said Marsden. "How am I to repay so huge a debt?"

"By giving me your life," she returned in quickly resolute tones, "by giving me your name!"

"Do you remember that I am not only in love with Nora, but openly engaged to her?"

"I do, and breaking with her will be a considerable part of your atonement. I know men tolerably well; you are quite capable of loving two."

"You are right! My love for Nora is—I can not speak of it to you—it has hitherto been the most, the only, spiritualized passion I ever knew, there has been no time as yet for it to become incarnate. Now there is in you an undertone of devilry that always attracted me."

"Will you break with Nora for my sake?" demanded Mrs. Ruthven imperiously.

"It could be managed," he returned thoughtfully, remembering his last interview with her. "Be that as it may, I shall never marry her now!"

"And my great sacrifice, will it marry Nora L'Estrange, to expose me to the contemptuous pity of all your world and mine. I was on the verge of getting a warrant of commitment against you. My relapse saved you. Ay, and saved me. Does not Nora love you intensely?" with keen curiosity.

Marsden understood the drift of the question.

"It would be unchivalrous to boast," said he, with a significant smile.

A look of delight in the suffering she hoped to inflict gleamed in Mrs. Ruthven's large dark eyes.

"I must let you go, dearest," she said, laying her hand caressingly on his shoulder, yet he fancied with a touch of proprietorship. "But you will be sure to return to dinner, and be sure you do not go to the L'Estranges'. A letter will do much better than an interview."

"An interview? God forbid!" he exclaimed, with unmistakable sincerity.

"How pleased Lady Dorrington will be," said Mrs. Ruthven, meditatively.

"Oh, charmed," returned Marsden, while he thought how cruel fate had been in permitting his affectionate interlocutor to leave Chedworth alive. "I must leave you now," he said. "I feel I must be alone. I am still dizzy and untinged with—the sense of your great goodness."

"But you will come back? You will not do yourself any harm?"—anxiously.

"No. I don't think I have pluck enough left to blow my brains out, or rather you have given me a fresh zest for life. You are looking awfully exhausted. You must lie down and rest."

"Do you care enough for me to wish I should rest?"

"How can you doubt? Good-bye for the present." A little further tribute, and he fled from her, half mad with rage, despair and self-contempt.

His ruling motive for the last few minutes had been to escape from Mrs. Ruthven, to be alone with his crushing sense of discovery and defeat. He had been utterly outwitted, he was at the mercy of a deeply injured woman—a woman from whom he shrunk revolted, all the more because he had injured her.

The force of degradation could no further go, and he had been such a to meet her eyes, to hear her voice, knowing he was a despicable outcast, from whom, was she but aware of his true character, she would turn with scorn and loathing. Why, if he had murdered a man in anger, he thought, as he paced his room, or sat with locked doors, his head buried in his hands, he could face the world with comparative boldness, and yet, how unjust opinion is! What real harm had he done Mrs. Ruthven? Only deprived her of a few baubles she looked quite as well without. He had not robbed her of any comfort or necessity, or of money or lands. Why had he been so unlucky as to have taken such an overpowering fancy to a girl like Nora unapproachable save by the tremendous sacrifice of marriage? This was really the mainspring of his misfortunes.

As to the future, he shuddered to think of it. Why should he not escape it? As to his solemn promise to Mrs. Ruthven, that weighed but lightly on his soul. What stayed his hand was partly the demoralization which seemed to paralyze him, but chiefly his dread of being hopelessly disgraced in Nora's eyes. She had immense power of him, and he had said truly, that all of good in him was linked with his feelings for her. Not he might have had resolution to end his ruined life, had he not felt convinced that Mrs. Ruthven, furious at being robbed of her prey, would tell all and make the worst of all to Nora. No; the one shred of comfort in the hell he had created for himself, was to remain unblemished in Nora's eyes. He would affect to release her by a noble effort of self-denial, and perhaps she would give him a kind thought; perhaps, when wearied of a monotonous life with Winton or some other prig, a regretful thought.

What a sham life was altogether! Was Nora as true, as real, as she seemed? Yes, now, he would swear, but how long would her truth last the wear and tear of the world?

Well, he had escaped detection, and for Nora's sake, for his sister's, his name's sake, he had better drift with the tide which seemed setting in his favor. His only way of enduring existence was to forget there was a yesterday or a to-morrow.

But dine with that woman, who was his mistress in the crudest sense, he could not—at least, to-day.

"There it is," cried Mrs. Ruthven, "singing her voice for the first time over the level tone at which she kept it, and drawing her breath a deep sob, as she took out of a all leather case, and threw to him, diamond stud. He had grown pretty colorless, but the hand with which he took up the stud was steady."

"And what does this prove?" he asked.

"That Clifford Marsden, of Eveleigh Manor, is a felon!" she answered, fierce exultation lighting up her face and gleaming in her eyes. "You think I did not recognize the peculiar setting of the diamond which caught my hair in that waltz last waltz?"

She stopped, her breast heaving. "I know I lost this stud," said Marsden, very deliberately, "on that lucky evening, and never could find it but why should not the robber have picked it up, if he found it, as most probably did, in the tent?" "You are a brave man to face me as I do!" she exclaimed. "But I did you in my hand," and she showed it. "I will tell you who and where! "Do not be so positive. Might it have fallen among your lace as I danced together, or when I was assisting to lift you?"

"No, no, no!" she cried, as if carded out of herself, and speaking with sense rapidly. "I saw it on your waist when you left me, and Nora, or Nora, told me you never touch me! It is useless denying your guilt. Wait, the detective knows it. He saw you here, here with me, before he started to pursue me. He stopped, panting. "Marsden rose slowly, his eyes fixed on her. She was frightened by his glance, his desperate look. She, too, but her fury seemed to evaporate."

has hitherto been the most, the only, spiritualized passion I ever knew, there has been no time as yet for it to become incarnate. Now there is in you an undertone of devilry that always attracted me."

"Will you break with Nora for my sake?" demanded Mrs. Ruthven imperiously.

"It could be managed," he returned thoughtfully, remembering his last interview with her. "Be that as it may, I shall never marry her now!"

"And my great sacrifice, will it not draw your heart to me!" she cried. "Oh! I have been wild with love and hate for you, and I feel how madly foolish and despicable I am to act as I do!" She burst into a passionate fit of sobbing.

The light came back to Marsden's eyes.

"You are a woman any man might love," he said, "and as you wisely admit that men can love two or more (we are generally broader than women, some women), you shall have all the love left in me, of my life-long gratitude you may be sure. You are making a sorry bargain, I warn you. I shall never be the same again, but if you care to be Mrs. Marsden of Eveleigh, so be it!"

"Ah! you are simply selling yourself! And what a price I pay!"

"No! by Heaven! I am grateful, and I always admired you! Even that night, when I unclasped your necklace I felt inclined to kiss the pretty white throat that was so velvet soft to my acridulous touch!"

"And why did you not! Had you brought back consciousness by your kisses and confided your difficulties to me, all would have been well!" cried the infatuated woman, throwing herself into his arms.

What could a criminal so respite do but pay the tribute demanded with liberal lips?

For the moment Marsden was moved and really grateful, though a bitter sense of being sold into slavery tinged his feelings of relief.

"How could you be so fascinated by Nora L'Estrange?" asked Mrs. Ruthven, still leaning against him and looking up in his face. "She never could understand you as I do, she never could share your feelings as I can."

"She is what she is," said he shortly, "and has been an infinite misfortune to me."

"I am glad you see it," Mrs. Ruthven sat down on the sofa and signed to him to sit beside her. "Can I trust you, Marsden?" looking intently into his face.

"I think so. Dictate your own terms—settle everything on yourself—everything of mine that is available. I shall never feel more than a dependent on your charity."

"You must not say that. You will see that, together, we shall command society."

"Tell me," resumed Marsden, after a moment's pause, "before we drop this accursed subject forever, how did that detective fellow see me?"

"Do you remember an engineer, a Mr. Colville, calling here and speaking to me of his little girl, who was my god-daughter?"

"Yes, Shirley was here."

"That man was Waite. I wanted him to see you. I wanted to test the completeness of his disguise by defying Shirley's recognition. Shirley found him for me."

"Good God, has Shirley any suspicion?"

"Not the faintest. Do not doubt, I took every precaution to shield the name I might possibly bear. I waited, oh, how impatiently! Hoping you would avow your love and difficulties to me, then I should have hidden my knowledge even from you; but when I found you were going to

How can you doubt? Good-bye for the present." A little further tribute; and he fled from her, half mad with rage, despair and self-contempt.

His ruling motive for the last few minutes had been to escape from Mrs. Ruthven, to be alone with his crushing sense of discovery and defeat. He had been utterly outwitted, he was at the mercy of a deeply injured woman—a woman from whom he shrunk revolted, all the more because he had injured her.

The force of degradation could no further go, and he had been such a doubly damned fool as to believe himself safe! That he could defy this keen, subtle, tenacious woman, and hug himself in the belief that by so base, so shabby a crime, he could secure an adorable creature like Nora! He had said truly that failure, detection, showed him the depth of shame into which he had fallen. Had he succeeded, it would not have occurred to him to repent.

Still aglow with the passion Nora had inspired, it was torture to give her up yet he had so much sense of right left, or rather restored, that he felt it would be equally torture to feel thought.

What a sham life was altogether! Was Nora as true, as real, as she seemed? Yes, now, he would swear, but how long would her truth last the wear and tear of the world?

Well, he had escaped detection, and for Nora's sake, for his sister's, his name's sake, he had better drift with the tide which seemed setting in his favor. His only way of enduring existence was to forget there was a yesterday or a to-morrow.

But dine with that woman, who was his mistress in the crudest sense, he could not—at least, to-day. No; to-day he must be alone; he must be free to swallow, unchecked, such an amount of burgundy, champagne, brandy, as might drown the intolerable rage and remorse that maddened him.

His incoherent note of excuse, however, only brought Nemesis upon him in the shape of Mrs. Ruthven herself, wrapped in shawls and furs, who sent up an urgent message, and sat in her carriage at the hotel door till her captive joined her, and was taken off in triumph.

Modernize your Kitchen

One by one the bugbears of housekeeping are being put to rout through the instrumentality of gas. The modern kitchen—which means the all-gas kitchen—is now a recognized part of the up-to-date home. The all-gas kitchen lightens labor. It means a clean, wholesome, sanitary kitchen, as there is no coal dust or ashes to be spread around, and it becomes a real pleasure to work in it. Every housewife desires to cook and heat water in the most economical way, in the quickest, most dependable way, with the least possible work.

The All-Gas way is the solution to the problem.

The hot weather is here now and if you want a cool, comfortable kitchen this summer come and select your Gas Range and Water Heater now. We have ranges at all prices.

THERE'S MONEY IN CORN.

Minnesota College Expert Says Seed Should Be Selected in the Fall.

There are few persons in the United States, or anywhere for that matter, who are drawing $200 a day in wages, so few that it would not take long to mention them. As a result a corn grower would be decidedly surprised if he were to be told that he could make as much, at least during one day in the year, as the very rich.

To put himself in the millionaire class one day in the year all that it is necessary for this corn grower to do, says Ray P. Spear, Minnesota College of Agriculture, is to select his seed corn in the fall. This is not a mere surmise, for statistics gathered by reliable corn experts prove the point beyond dispute. The story is not long and is simple enough for any one to understand.

The average yield of corn in Minnesota during 1900 and 1910 was 27.4 bushels of corn per acre. Based on a cost of production per acre of $13.75, according to the figures taken from a series of farms in southeastern Minnesota for five years, this average yield barely exceeds the cost of producing it. A higher yield of corn must be secured if a profit is to be obtained.

thirty bushel yield will represent a profit.

How is this yield to be obtained, and what bearing does it have on the $200 wage? It has been proved by the Iowa experiment station and others that the yield of corn varies directly as the stand, and the stand, needless to say, cannot be better than the seed corn planted. If seed corn therefore can be secured which is so much better than ordinary seed as to produce a forty bushel crop where thirty bushels were secured before this means an additional profit amounting to the market price of the increased yield. One person can easily pick eight bushels of good seed corn in a day, and this will plant approximately fifty acres. The increase in yield of the seed produced forty bushels an acre—and there is no reason why forty bushels could not be produced—would mean an increase of 500 bushels, worth at least $200. This is a very good day's salary. It certainly would pay the average farmer to put himself in the millionaire class one day this fall.

PERMANENT PASTURE.

Advantage of Winter Feeding Is in Use of Byproducts.

If a portion of the land is too rough for cultivation or if the farm is of such a size that there is too much land for the help employed and not enough to demand another hand, it is often advisable to keep this extra land in permanent pasture. On many large farms it is better because of the scarcity of labor to farm less intensively and keep a considerable area in pasture. Under such circumstances feeding on pasture should prove remunerative.

The advantages of winter feeding consist in the opportunities to make better use of the byproducts, such as corn fodder, damaged hay, etc., and the better distribution of labor. In the western part of the corn belt the majority of the cattle are fed during the late fall and early winter months, so that they may be out of the way before bad weather sets in, thus avoiding expensive shelter. A little farther east, where the disagreeable weather begins earlier, it is customary to rough the cattle on pasture and stalk fields until December or January, when they are put into the yards and fattened. In the eastern part of the corn belt cattle are frequently fattened in sheds or barns.

The number of steers to be fattened depends on the quantity of roughage available. If there is a surplus of corn it should be sold or fed to hogs. On the other hand, if there is a slight deficiency it may prove more economical to buy a little corn or other concentrate than to dispose of the rough feed.

Strength of Eggshells.

Most people are aware of the power of eggshells to resist external pressure on the ends, but not many would credit the results of tests recently made, which appear to be genuine. Eight ordinary hen's eggs were submitted to pressure applied externally all over the surface of the shell, and the breaking pressure varied between 400 pounds and 675 pounds per square inch. With the stresses applied internally to twelve eggs these gave way at pressures varying between 32 pounds and 65 pounds per square inch. The pressure required to crush the egg varied between 40 pounds and 75 pounds. The average thickness of the shells was 13-1000

IN THE HOG LOT.

Where the pigs are allowed to run with the sow and to wean themselves it is almost impossible for the mature female to produce more than one litter a year.

The age of show hogs is counted from March 1 or from Sept. 1 of the year the animals were farrowed.

See that your hog yards and pastures are tightly fenced. The roaming hog makes slow gains and lots of trouble.

The water wallow, in which crude oil or coal tar dip is sprinkled also spells rout to lice.

The manner in which the sow is fed and cared for determines the size of the litter in a measure, at least.

MISSHAPED FOALS.

Treatment For Youngsters Born With Weak Pasterns.

Some foals come into this world so wobbly and misshaped about the legs that it would seem almost impossible for them ever to straighten up. Most of them do, however, manage to come right, though it takes some of them far longer than others to do so, writes John Mason in the National Stockman. As a general rule, there is no cause for alarm, even if a foal is so crooked in his legs as to promise deformity, but when the pastern joints are so long and weak that the youngster breaks back onto the ground with the bottom of the ankle joint, it is well to give some support. This may be done by fitting a piece of moderately stiff leather around the leg and lacing it up so as to give the required support to the joint too weak to bear the strain. In such case line the boot with wash or chamois leather and observe carefully that it does not gall or abrade the leg anywhere.

It is quite a trick to fit one of these boots to the leg properly, and hence when a foal fails to straighten up off the ground it is best to seek the aid of the veterinarian. Sometimes all that is required is to feed the foal a little warm new cow's milk two or

Men who are raising stock like this have nothing to fear from the advent of the tractor or the motor truck.

SUMMER FOOD COMBINATIONS.

One of the difficult problems in housekeeping is to combine foods which properly go together.

Here are some healthful combinations of uncooked foods which will help you to solve summer problems:

Prepared wheat or rice with nuts, dates and cream, or wheat with nuts, honey, milk and cream.

Starch, sugar and fats are fuel, and nuts, cheese and eggs are muscle builders.

Apples, oranges, grapes, plums, peaches, pineapples or berries are both foods and germicides.

One meal each day of uncooked food or a part of two meals will be a considerable saving of time and fuel.

It is always best to make any change in the diet gradually.

UNCOOKED FOODS.

Desirable For Summer Use Since They Are Digested Easily.

To preserve the health in summer make the simple foods your first choice. In selecting fruit always give preference to that which has ripened on parent stalk.

Bananas, for instance, should not be cut from the stalk as long as speck of green remains. You can of buy bananas at half price because they are black. If they are not decayed they are much better food than yellow bananas.

Dates, figs and raisins are all good foods and can be used to good advantage as a summer food which require no cooking. The unpressed figs are considered to be much cleaner than pressed, and the seeded raisins more desirable than the unseeded.

When buying apples pick the bright red ones which have ripened in sunshine.

Other desirable foods for summer which require no cooking are olives, nuts, peanut butter, milk, honey, fruits, celery, cabbage, lettuce, cucumbers, radishes, onions, tomatoes, cherries, cheese, berries, pears and plums.

HANDSOME HAND BAGS.

Fabrics and Leather Combined to Make Popular Accessories to the Toilet.

The smartest and newest hand bag is not a hand bag at all. It may better be called a hand box or a hand trunk, for it is a tiny square box of leather. Indeed, it is like a miniature jewel box.

The English of It.

A lady, accompanied by her small son, was making various purchases at the army and navy stores in London. The boy grew tired.

"Who are you buying these for?" he asked.

"Why, for father," was the mother's reply.

"Father in heaven or father in India?" the boy persisted.

The lady mentioned the remark to a friend, who, thinking it amusing, repeated it to an Englishwoman at church a few days later. The Englishwoman listened sympathetically. "Poor woman!" she sighed. "She was married twice."

A massive shoulder like the one on this Belgian stallion is a pleasant thing to look at. This big fellow was good enough to take first place at four state fairs and carries his ton and a quarter gracefully. In his head and the blending of the neck with his shoulder are shown the quality that is needed to build the right kind of horses. Men who are raising stock like this have nothing to fear from the advent of the tractor or the motor truck.

three times a day so as to increase its strength more quickly. That is usually preferable to boots or any other similar contrivance, but there are times and cases where artificial aid is required. A little phosphate of calcium added to the milk or drinking water is also beneficial to foals, as it is to children. Sound, plump oats bruised and the shucks sieved out are also great helps as soon as foals are able to eat, and lime water never comes amiss. When feeding cows' milk to weak foals never forget to add lime water at the rate of three or four dessertspoonfuls to the pint. It helps to keep the stomach right.

After foals born with crooked legs have straightened up and their hoofs have hardened they should be watched most carefully and any tendency of the feet to grow uneven prevented. A touch or two with the rasp on the feet of a foal will often keep him from going unsound and make a valuable horse of one that, unattended aright, might readily have degenerated into a valueless nuisance around the farm.

Corn and Alfalfa.

The sheet anchor of real economic feeding for milk or meat is the corn plant in the form of the succulent ensilage and the cap cured alfalfa hay. Let the farmer get settled down square on that idea; let him put up his silos; perfect himself in the knowledge of growing alfalfa; study how to produce a good dairy cow or a beef steer that shall take that feed and return him the best results possible, and he has struck the final word in the production of the most profitable meat or milk. But it is folly to separate these two feeds and undertake to make one do the work of the other, just as it would to separate the blade from the handle in a jack-knife and then ask which is the most useful of the two in comparison.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Scouring Calves.

Give each scouring calf a dose of castor oil in milk, then a few teaspoonful doses of a mixture of equal parts bicarbonate of soda, subnitrate of bismuth and one part of salol, washed down with milk or water. In each pint of milk fed mix one teaspoonful of a mixture of half an ounce of formaldehyde and fifteen and one-half ounces of freshly boiled water.

Unrenewable Patent.

A lawyer who makes a specialty of patent cases was once engaged in a case before a country justice.

"Who are you anyway?" demanded the justice.

"Well," replied the lawyer, "I'm an attorney."

"Praps you are, but I never heard one talk like you do. What kind of a one are you?"

"I'm a patent attorney."

The magistrate rubbed his chin in thought. "Well, all I've got to say it," he said slowly, "that when the patent expires I don't believe you can ever get it renewed again."

On the top of the box, which opens with two flaplike covers that meet under the handle, is the owner's monogram in gold and silver.

The box is very tiny, but its square shape makes it possible to stow in it depths a surprising number of arti-

SUMMER PITCHER.

A tall pitcher or jug, with a cover that fits snugly in place to keep insect out, is a summer convenience. It can be used for chocolate or an iced drink. It is made in most attractive pattern of dull blue or brown on a cream ground. The top of the cover is of pottery like the jug, but it is set into a flexible metal ring that expands a bit after it is fitted in place, and so holds the cover tight.

There is a strainer in the lip that would keep cracked ice from pouring into the glasses.

"Oh," replied Mr. Sampson, taking it off, "that was to remind me of my engagement with you to-night."

It wasn't much, but it was enough to take away the delightful dizziness.—London Chronicle.

LINGERIE VESTS.

Cool and Dainty Accessories to Tub or Taffeta Tailored Suits.

NEW NECKWEAR FOR FALL.

Winged Effects to Be Prominent and Hand Embroidered Designs to Retain Their Vogue—Rolling and High Backed Novelties Are to Make a Hit.

Tailored gowns of silk and linen are cut on lines that make marked demands on the ingenuity of designers of neckwear. Collars of all styles are worn over the little coats. Those who buy in the midseason or late in the season should do so with an eye to the fall fashions. Discussing fall styles in neckwear, the Dry Goods Economist says:

"Among the clever ideas in the tailored lines are the wing effects, constructed along the lines of the wing collars worn by men.

"New rolling and high backed novelties are being prepared, many of which hug the throat more closely than herebacked styles is almost perfectly square and does not extend along the sides of the neck at all.

"From all present indications the strong position now occupied by hand embroidered collars and vests will be maintained for fall. Pique, organdie and batiste novelties will be shown. Smart, plain linen styles will be prominent. One of the newest of the vests now being featured is a plain linen with patch pockets on either side and big round sailor collar. The simulated vest effect also promises well in girdles for the early fall."

The combined collars and vests pictured here are useful for wear with the tailored taffeta or the linen tub suit. The vest with the winged collar was of fine linen with all over embroidery. The other vest was of lace. The advantage of the linen vest and collar lies in the fact that it launders so satisfactorily.

GIRLS' GOWNS.

Simple and Graceful Styles For Summer Vacation Wear.

In the matter of the waist line—whether it is up under the armpits or down below the normal waist line or right at the waist line—there seems to be no fixed rule this season. Some of the very little girls' frocks are made with a high waist line and a round yoke that drops off the shoulders with very small puff sleeves that remind one of the delightful children on Lawrence's canvases or some old daguerreotype. These dresses are, many of them, made up with a combination of Irish lace and hand embroidery.

Many of the new lingerie dresses are finished around the hem with a trimming of lace, sometimes narrow and sometimes several inches wide, but there is something prettier, daintier, in better taste about the plain hem. The simplicity of a straight line around the bottom of the frock is more suitable for the little girl. A row of Irish lace insertion at the head of the hem is much more effective than a row of edging at the bottom.

Colored linen—pink, blue, green and yellow—is seen in some of the new frocks of a more substantial sort. The newest development of these frocks is in the separate overlapping waist portion—a sort of sleeveless bolero that slips on over the skirt, which is fastened to a lining body which also holds the sleeves. Often in these frocks the sleeves and collars are made of white muslin or linen. Buttons of white crochet are the most acceptable trimmings for this sort of frock.

SILVER LIKE NEW.

Put a Piece of Aluminium In the Water In Which It Is Cleaned.

If you want to clean your silver try this plan:

Get a piece of aluminium—you can buy it at any shop where metals are sold—or a few scraps of aluminium from a repairing motor garage will do.

Put the aluminium into an enamel bowl or saucepan (don't use an iron one on any account); add two quarts of boiling water and two heaped tablespoonfuls of washing soda.

Put the silver in, being careful that some of it touches the aluminium, and let it stay from three to five minutes, or, if you can manage it, boil it in the water for a minute or two.

Rinse in warm water and dry with a clean cloth, and your silver will look like new.

TORTURED BY CONSTIPATION

"Fruit-a-tives" Cured Paralyzed Bowels and Digestion

ST. BONIFACE DE SHAWINIGAN, QUE. Feb. 3rd, 1914.

"It is a pleasure to me to inform you that after suffering from Chronic Constipation for 2½ years, I have been cured by 'Fruit-a-tives'. While I was a student at Berthier College, I became so ill I was forced to leave the college. Severe pains across the intestines continually tortured me and it came to a point when I could not stoop down at all, and my Digestion became paralyzed. Some one advised me to take 'Fruit-a-tives' and at once I felt a great improvement. After I had taken four or five boxes, I realized that I was completely cured and what made me glad, also, was that they were acting gently, causing no pain whatever to the bowels. All those who suffer with Chronic Constipation should follow my example and take 'Fruit-a-tives' for they are the medicine that cures".

CARE OF PETS.

How to Keep Pussy and Her Family Healthy and Handsome.

One of the early afflictions of kittens is sore eyes. The kittens should be kept out of the light until they begin to run about; then, as a rule, eye trouble need not be feared.

If in spite of precaution and care the eyes become affected, bathe them frequently with a weak, warm boracic lotion applied on absorbent cotton, dry thoroughly with a soft rag and then apply a little vaseline.

At three weeks old the kittens may begin to lap a little milk. To commence each should have a tablespoonful twice a day—not pure milk; a little warm water and sugar should be added. This can gradually be increased and thickened with barley meal. Then bread and milk may be given, and a little mashed potato and gravy.

Olive oil is splendid for their coats and checks constipation. Give a small dose twice a week. Begin with a quarter of a teaspoonful, gradually increasing to a teaspoonful.

At eight weeks the kittens should be weaned. Give them four meals a day. Sweetened and slightly diluted milk should be served for breakfast. Another saucerful should be given at 11 a.m. Mashed vegetables, breadcrumbs and gravy, with a few tiny scraps of meat—no bones or gristle—are suitable for dinner, and at 6 p.m. a saucerful of bread and milk will be sufficient. Before leaving them for the night place a little diluted milk within reach.

When administering medicine the best plan is to hold the kitten between the kitten's teeth with the right hand while holding the head and ears with the left. Pussy has to be fondled and is seldom too ill to appreciate it.

Miss Mary O'Neill, aged eighteen, died on Friday night, at the Kingston General Hospital. The body was conveyed to her home in Stratheona. The cause of her death was typhoid fever.

A good many of the citizens of Napanee would like to be able to get their papers from the post-office on Sunday mornings. It would be much appreciated if the office were opened for a short time on Sunday mornings while the war lasts.

On Monday evening about 10 o'clock a citizen passing the hardware store of M. S. Madole, noticed a blaze inside. The alarm was sounded and in a few minutes the firemen, with the assistance of several citizens, extinguished the blaze before much damage was done. It is thought the fire started from combustion.

War Prices.

In Picton the grocers will not sell more than 5 lbs. of sugar to one customer, to prevent anyone laying in large supplies. Picton bakers are still supplying bread at the old price 10 cts. per loaf. Are our bakers entitled to larger prices than Picton bakers, or are they merely taking advantage of the situation and increasing prices accordingly? Complaints are also made of some grocers making undue increases in the price of several necessary supplies.

Private Sale.

Commencing Tuesday, September 1st, at 1 o'clock, at my residence, first house on Belleville road. I will offer for sale, by private sale, all my household goods, including 1 piano, practically new, 1 steel range, practically new, 1 upright coal stove, 1 gasoline stove, bed-room suits, carpets, dishes, coach, table and chairs, and other household goods too numerous to mention. On August 16th, at the manse, Colborne, Mrs. Lester Allen Aylesworth passed away after an illness of almost eight months, which finally developed into heart trouble and other complications. Deceased was formerly Mary Elizabeth Bennington, and was born at Glenvale, township of Kingston, in May 1871. During her married life she lived at Bath, and in March, 1913, Mr. and Mrs. Aylesworth retired and went to live with their daughter, at Colborne, Ont., where Mr. Aylesworth died suddenly of heart trouble on October 1st of last year. Since that time Mrs. Aylesworth had been gradually failing in health, sometimes a little better and in hopes of recovery, but failing very fast at the last. She passed peacefully away on Sunday, August 16th. During all her illness she bore her suffering with christian patience and great fortitude. A short service was conducted at the Manse, Colborne, by Rev. Mr. Knox of the Methodist church and Rev. Mr. Church of the Baptist church, after which the remains were taken by G. T. R. to the Presbyterian Church, Bath, where a service was conducted by Rev. T. J.
Glover, of Toronto, a former pastor.

Penslar Is Coming!

Courage, Canada

CANADA is favored among the nations. We have peace within our own borders. We have learned the lessons taught by lean times, and so are prepared to face the days ahead.
Our farmers are prospering by reason of the present conditions—and when agriculture flourishes, the business outlook is one of good cheer.

Some Canadian industries and mercantile enterprises must suffer because of the partial suspension of trans-oceanic trade. But more industries will be stimulated to supply our home demand, which MUST be satisfied. It is a time of business opportunity in Canada.

Let Courage Possess Us

his new shop in Kingston about October 6th. The new premises will be a basement shop, located under Baker's Cigar Store, and will be put in A 1 shape, up-to-date in every respect, and second to none. There will be fine big mirrors, latest cases, while the chairs will be of the latest pattern of white porcelain, making in all one of the finest four chair barber shops in the province. We feel satisfied that Kingston will have an addition to its barber shops of which it might be proud of! It will be known as "The King Edward," and as Mr.
Ferguson says, that sounds good enough for him. During his citizenship in Napanee, Mr. Ferguson has been associated with the Citizen's Band, the Fire Company. He is a respected member of Argyle Lodge, No. 212, I. O. O. F., and has been at all times a hearty supporter of all clean sports in Napanee. Our good wishes go with Mr. and Mrs. Ferguson to their new home.
